Farewell to New-York—"Where are we Going?"—Doubts and Theories—Our Company—Amusements on Shipboard—A New National Anthem—Notabilities on Board—Gens. Banks, Hamilton, Augur and Grover—The Governor of Texas and Her Regeneration.

ON BOARD STEAMER NORTH STAR, GULF OF MEXICO, Thursday, Dec. 11, 1862.

To-day completes exactly one week since, with mingled feelings of adventurous exultation at some grand but unknown career of good before us, and sad emotions at quitting the loved ones at home, we saw New-York fade away in the grey distance, as the staunch and gallant North Star, Capt. LEFEVRE, plowed its way majestically through the waters, freighted with its 850 souls, toward whose fate and destination the whole country is doubtless, at this moment, looking with such absorbing interest.

"Where are we going?" was the universal question on board, and one which seemed as far from solution there as it had been for the two last months on land, while the expedition was preparing. For once, Uncle Sam had managed to keep his own secret inviolable, and even those sagacious political ferrets—newspaper correspondents—were completely nonplused in the profound mazes of mystery that concealed everything. The few prominent officials on board, who might or might not be in possession of the facts of our destination, were all armed cap-à-pie against any intruders in the shape of questioners, and the remotest allusion to our probable or even possible course only drew forth a significant and tantalizing smile. The James River, Charleston, Mobile, New-Orleans, Galveston, and a dozen other places, all had their advocates among the uninitiated, each one brimfull of convincing proofs. I am not sure that some do not even fancy we are on our way to Japan, and, when we were a few days out—within thirty miles of the coast of Cuba—one intelligent old man whispered in my ear that he would "bet his life it was a design against Cuba after all."

Do we know anything more now? Not a whit positively—although negatively we are by this time enabled to draw conclusions which were beyond our reach on shore. For instance, having already sighted the light-house of one of the Bahamas and left the Tortugas far behind us, it may pretty safely be inferred that we are not going up the James River, and equally certain is it that we are not going—at present at least—to storm Charleston or Savannah. Beyond this nothing is absolutely known, and cannot be until we actually reach our destination; but there are, unquestionably, sufficient rumors afloat on board, to indulge speculators in every kind of opinion.

The record of our voyage, so far, would be one entirely devoid of anything like exciting interest, and for the very reason that it has been so uniformly calm and delightful. Indeed, it is difficult to realize sometimes that we are not going upon a large pic-nic excursion, but embarked in one of the most important and momentous expeditions that ever quitted the shores of this or any other country—an expedition in all probability destined, by God's blessing, to strike more radical and telling blow for the redemption of our country, at this critical hour, than anything we have hitherto done by strategy or force of arms.

OFFICERS OF THE EXPEDITION.

My duties would be incomplete, however, did I not attempt a slight picture of the contents of our gallant vessel. First, we have on board Maj.-Gen. N. P. BANKS, U. S. A., commanding Expedition, and his Staff, composed of the following gentlemen:

Lieut.-Col. R. B. Irwin, Assistant Adjutant-General.
Lieut.-Col. Wm. S. Abert, Assistant Inspector-General.
Maj. G. N. Liebe r, Judge Advocate.
Col. John S. Clark, Aid-de-Camp.
Capt. Frederick d'Hauteville, Aid-de-Camp.
Capt. R. T. Dunham, Aid-de-Camp.
First Lieut. Chas. A. Hartwell, Aid-de-Camp.
Second Lieut. S. M. Whitside, Aid-de-Camp.
Capt. W. S. Hooper, Aid-de-Camp.
First Lieut. C. S. Sargent, Acting Aid-de-Camp.
Maj. Haral Robinson, Volunteer Aid-de-Camp.
Col. Samuel B. Holabird, Chief Quartermaster.
Capt. J. W. McClure, Chief Executive Officer under Holabird.
Col. E. G. Beckwith, Chief Commissary.
Surgeon R. H. Alexander, Medical Director.
Maj. D. C. Houston, Chief Engineer.
Capt. H. L. Abbot, Chief of Topographical Engineers.
First Lieut. R. M. Hill, Chief of Ordnance.
Capt. Richard Arnold, Chief of Artillery.
Capt. W. W. Rowley, Chief Signal Officer.
Francis D'Avignon, Lithographer.

Brig.-Gen. A. J. HAMILTON'S Staff is composed as follows:

C. P. Shaw, Private Secretary.
Maj. W. L. Burt, Aid-de-Camp.
Capt. J. K. Herbert, Aid-de-Camp.

Brig.-Gen. C. C. AUGUR has for his Staff the following:

Major G. B. Halstead, A. A. G.
Major John H. Reutche, Surgeon.
Capt. H. O. Woodruff, Commissary.
Capt J. Hodge, Quartermaster.
Capt. Walter Cutting, Aid-de-Camp.
Capt. James Benkard, Aid-de-Camp.
Capt. Geo. H. Shaw, Aid-de-Camp.
Capt. M. Ritchie, Aid-de-Camp.
Capt. Stevens, Aid-de-Camp.

Brig.-Gen. GROVER'S Staff, is as follows:

T. B. Read, Surgeon.
Capt. Joseph Hibbert, A. A. G.
Capt. F. W. Perkins, A. Q. M.
Capt. W. P. Cowle, A. Com. Gen.
Lieut. J. B. Browne, Aid-de-Camp.

In the Topographical Department we have:

Capt. H. L. Abbot, Chief.
W. H. Browne, Photographer.
Walter Ogilvie, Photographer.
Alex. Ross, Civil Engineer.
W. H. Long, Civil Engineer.
Capt. A. Hufkill, Civil Engineer.
W. C. Hawksworth, Civil Engineer.
J. Deutsch, Civil Engineer.
T. W. Robbins, Civil Engineer.
C. D. Elliott, Draughtsman.

We have also on board, the Forty-first Massachusetts, Col. THOS. E. CHICKERING, of Boston, with the following officers:

Lieutenant-Colonel—Ansel D. Wass, Boston.
Major—Lorenzo D. Sargent, Lawrence.
Adjutant—Henry S. Adams, Chicopee.
Quartermaster—Chas. B. Stoddard, Plymouth.
Surgeon—Albert H. Blanchard, Sherburne.
Assistant Surgeons—Dan. F. Leavitt, South Danvers; Daniel S. Allen, Gloucester.
Chaplain—Henry F. Lane, Lawrence.
Sergeant-Major—John M. Ralston, Charlestown.
Quartermaster-Sergeant—George A. Fiske, Jr., Roxbury.
Commissary-Sergeant—Chas. B. Stone, Roxbury.
Hospital Steward—Harry N. Coburn, New-Bedford.
Drum-Major—A. B. Chase, Boston.
Armorer—A. G. Crossley, Boston.
Color-Sergeant—Alfred W. Bullock, Boston.

Captains—John F. Vinal, New-Bedford; Edward L. Noyes, Lawrence; John L. Swift, Roxbury; Frederick G. Pope, Boston; Lyman W. Gould, Boston; Francis E. Boyd, Boston; G. Frank Stevens, Lawrence; Wm. H. Seamans, Roxbury.

First Lieutenants—Jas. W. Hervey, New-Bedford; C. T. Iacheider, Lawrence; Wm. T. Hodges, Roxbury; Wm. M. Gifford, Boston; Wesley A. Gore, Boston; C. W. C. Rhoades, Boston; Henry C. Dane, Cambridge; David P. Muzzey, Cambridge.

Second Lieutenants—Eliph H. Robbins, New-Bedford; Charles Stone, Lawrence; Theodore C. Otis, Roxbury; Wm. Harris, Jr., Boston; John H. Weston, Boston; John C. Gray, Jr., Boston; Amos Henfield, Salem; John Commerford, Lowell.

OCCUPATIONS AND AMUSEMENTS DURING THE VOYAGE.

For a day or two after leaving home the weather was somewhat cold and gusty, necessitating the free use of overcoats, but as soon as we had passed the redoubtable Cape Hatteras, the air became mild and balmy, and the sea, although not actually calm, (to a flock of land birds like ourselves) has been nothing at all approaching what those accustomed to the sea would call rough, and we have hitherto had nothing but a fair sky and genial breezes. Indeed, for the last two days the sun has been shining down upon us with almost Midsummer fervor.

The large number of people we have on board—by no means too many for the capacity of this splendid vessel—prevents us from knowing anything of that monotony so common on shipboard. Apart from the martial air created by the presence of so many officers and soldiers, and the enlivening sounds of the bugle and drum, there is enough social converse among so large a congregation of intelligence to make the days pass most agreeably. Music necessarily forms no small portion of the recreation with which we seek to beguile the passing hours, and we are very fortunate in having not only a splendid military band—that of the Fiftieth Massachusetts voluntarily accompanying Gen. BANKS—but also a first-rate glee club—that of the Forty-first Massachusetts, whose performances would do no discredit to some of the best concert-rooms in New-York.

The latter created quite a sensation last night by serenading Gen. BANKS with a new unpublished National anthem, called "Columbia, Hope of the World," which seemed to elicit approbation from the crowds who had descended to the lower cabin to hear it, as well as from Gen. BANKS himself, and which is, by permission, to be dedicated to the General. The music was composed by that prince of musicians, CARL ANSCHUTZ, and the words by one whose name I am not at present permitted to divulge. The fact is, that having been most intimately connected with the author for something more than 40 years, and knowing him to be a man of the most painful modesty, I am unwilling to do such violence to his feelings. As it might be wrong, however, to deny the world in general, and the New-York TIMES in particular, the pleasure of seeing this new lyrical aspirant to public favor, I herewith produce it:

COLUMBIA! HOPE OF THE WORLD!

Columbia! bright happy land of the West,
Where footstep of tyrant ne'er trod,
Where man is exulting, untrammeled and blest,
In freedom created by God.
'Tis sung by the oceans that lave thy glad shores,
'Tis echoed o'er mountain and lea,
'Tis thundered where mighty Niagara roars:
"Columbia belongs to the free!"

CHORUS:

Then Heaven Columbia cherish and save!
May Liberty's banner unfurled
Above thee forever triumphantly wave,
Columbia! Hope of the world.

To thee all who suffer by tyranny's doom
Look up as their bright guiding star,
Their shackles grow looser, and lighter their gloom,
While dreaming of thee from afar;
And when from the toils of oppression they come,
To seek a fond refuge in thee,
Each exile who finds in thy bosom a home
Adores thee, thou shrine of the free!

CHORUS.

Thou Queen of the Nations! where Peace spreads her wings,
In joy thy green fields are arrayed,
But when through thy valleys the war-trumpet rings,
Let foemen beware of thy blade!
Long, long may thy sons in contentment rejoice,
The bulwarks of liberty be.
And, ever united, sing out with one voice:
"God bless thee, sweet home of the free!"

CHORUS.

Then perish the heart that would dim but one ray
Of glory that circles thy name,
And wither the hand that would dare pluck away
One star from thy banner of fame!
By each noble grave, where so peacefully lie
The heroes whose blood flowed for thee,
We swear that—like them—we will conquer or die,
To guard thee, dear land of the free!

CHORUS.

When not confined to his state-room by indisposition, which, fortunately, was not frequently, Gen. BANKS has mingled cheerfully with his fellow-voyagers, and won the golden opinions of all by his affable, courteous and kindly bearing. The same may be said of Gens. A. J. HAMILTON, AUGUR and GROVER; and, indeed, of many of the leading officers under them. A pleasanter set of gentlemen it would have been difficult to get together.

GEN. A. J. HAMILTON—THE SOUTHERN UNIONISTS.

But perhaps there is no individual on board around whom clusters a deeper interest than Brig.-Gen. A. J. HAMILTON, the future Governor of Texas; the more so from the mystery of his position and the martyrdom he has suffered in the cause of his country. It has been not only my pleasure but good fortune to come in daily, almost hourly contact with him and his very able and indefatigable Secretary, Mr. C. P. SHAW; and it was in the course of these delightful conversations that I thought I discovered the mainspring of that magical attraction which has enabled him—a comparative Southern stranger—in the course of only a few months, to win the love, respect and confidence, of the entire Northern people.

The simple truth is that the General is an HONEST man; and whatever he says you resistlessly have to believe. His burly, manly frame, seems the very incarnation of truth, courage, and heroic endurance, and as he converses with one in his open-hearted, unassuming manner, upon the great events now passing in our distracted country, every word carries conviction to the hearer, and one instinctively longs to unite his destiny with such a man.

Few, even of those who have listened, spell-bound, in New-York to the irresistible—because honest and truthful—oratory of the Governor, wherein he gave an account of his sufferings in our cause, are aware of how much—how very much has been hitherto kept from the public view; and which is of two sacred and domestic a character for me here to reveal. If they only knew all that this truly noble man has undergone and is still undergoing, in his devotion to country and principle, how far higher would he soar in public estimation; and how infinitely deeper would be the abhorrence felt for those against whom he has so long and so nobly been struggling, to the imminent risk of life, fortune, domestic happiness and all that is dearest to man! When history comes to record the names of our martyrs, —such men as BROWNLOW—Col. CHARLES ANDERSON of TEXAS—ANDY JOHNSON—BOULIGNY of New-Orleans, and others of that ilk, the name of A. J. HAMILTON will stand high indeed among that glorious fraternity.

What Gov. HAMILTON'S future course is to be in Texas, it is not for me to state, even if I knew; but of one thing you may be assured, and that is that if Government should send him forward with the powers which he ought to command, you could look for nothing less than the speedy and complete regeneration of the whole of that vast and valuable portion of our Republic. When I say regeneration, I mean that, whenever the blow shall be struck, you will see treason and despotism vanish, and free-soil, free-speech, free-labor and free-government popularized throughout Western Texas; and this not necessarily by force of arms, but by the simple working of public opinion. I count upon our finding there not so much a military as a moral revolution; though we should, doubtless, be prepared for either.

And what better man could be selected for redeeming the great State of Texas? Gov. HAMILTON is essentially a man of the people, and has always been near to and among them. His Congressional District extends over a vast area, from the Rio Grande to the Trinity—an area embracing 180,000 square miles, or two-thirds the whole of Texas—twice the size of France, and four and a half times that of the State of New-York! In this immense region, comprising 200,000 white population, (about half that of the whole State,) some 50,000 slaves, and only 3,000 slaveholders, Gov. HAMILTON is intensely popular. There, too, the rebels are known to have less organization, less numbers, less arms, and less motives for disloyalty. Can we doubt what the result must be, should we ever be permitted to witness this staunch and devoted loyalist returned as a redeemer to his suffering people, and backed by the whole power and authority of the United States? A more sublime spectacle of National regeneration was, perhaps, never before presented to the world, than we may yet have a chance of seeing in Texas.

I may have occasion to add a few more remarks before this letter is sent on its destination.

Stopping at Ship Island—Arrival of Transports—Running into a Mud-Bank—Fort St. Philip and Fort Jackson—A Formidable Rebel—The Crescent City—Its Appearance and Condition—Removal of Gen. Butler.

NEW-ORLEANS, Monday, Dec. 15, 1862.

Here we are, at last, at the Crescent City, before which the North Star proudly cast anchor last evening, in one of the most glorious sunsets that the eye could witness.

Before making any comments upon the appearance and general state of things here, it may be well to go back a day or two, so as to make my narrative complete.

It was early on the morning of Saturday, the 13th, that Ship Island, which—in spite of all attempt at concealment—had been, for two or three days previous, pretty well understood as our first stopping-place—came into view. This small island, one of several similar scraps of land forming the southern boundary of the Mississippi Sound, is nothing but an insignificant and barren little sand-bank, with a light-house, a few wooden buildings, and the tents of the regiments now located there. It appears to rise so little above the water level, that at a small distance it seems strange that it is not altogether submerged.

As we approached the island, the first vessel that we neared was the old hulk of the New-England, ominous-named, which a great many on board noticed with much glee. It was while anchored here that, for the first time, we caught a glimpse of the transports bearing the brave fellows who were to accompany us. Up to this time, we seemed to have the wide ocean entirely to ourselves. Except a stray sail, which every now and then caught our eye in the distant horizon, and then as quickly disappeared, no vessel whatever seemed to be bearing us company. Many were the comments on board as to the fact of a vessel so richly freighted as ours being left without convoys—utterly unfit as she was for self-defence in case of attack—and every time a glass was leveled at some new-comer in the distance, the cry was raised: "The Alabama!" to the amusement of the waggish or stoical, but perhaps to the trepidation of some with weaker nerves.

First came up the Northern Light, crowded with troops, then the Baltic and Illinois, followed by others, dotting the ocean at long intervals, as far as the eye could reach. It was a grand and inspiriting sight.

It was 10 A. M. when we arrived at the island. We remained there only two or three hours, during which time we were visited by Paymaster TARBELL, Lieut. CHURCHILL, of the flag-ship Vincennes, and Brig.-Gen. EMORY. Gen. BANKS, accompanied by Gens. AUGUR and GROVER, and a few Staff officers, also went ashore, and Gov. HAMILTON and his Secretary visited the Illinois. Immediately on their return, we were off again to—nobody knew where. About 2 o'clock the next morning (Sunday,) I was roused from my sleep by feeling a sudden jerk of the vessel, and on going out in the cold moonlight to see what was the matter, found that in feeling our way to the mouths of the Mississippi, we had run into one of the many mud-banks which choke up the waters of these regions. It was not blowing hard, and therefore nobody seemed to care about it, and we were soon out of the mud, and on our way again.

At 6 o'clock A. M. a pilot came on board and took us safely through the bar of the Southwest passage, when we were immediately followed by the various transports. At 11 o'clock we passed forts St. Philip and Jackson, and, for the first time, I fully realized the matchless glory of that daring exploit of our gunboats under FARRAGUT. The forts there are so near each other, and Fort Jackson being all casemated, it is scarcely conceivable how our gallant men succeeded as they did. The forts presented the most beautiful and animated appearance as we passed; the soldiers all crowding the ramparts and loud cheers and counter-cheers passing between them and their brave brothers on board, while the colors were dipped and a salute of twelve guns fired in honor of the occasion.

Soon after passing the Quarantine the river became extremely interesting, as we steamed among the orange groves and immense plantations of sugar-cane, with their shining white negro quarters, and the rich planters' houses, surrounded by verandahs and embedded among evergreen trees, with the dismal cypress and its hanging moss perpetually intervening. Constantly on each bank of the river were to be met gangs of negroes huzzaing as we passed, and now and then some Secesh who would not give us an equally warm welcome. One fellow, coming with his squalid-looking wife from out of a miserable shanty, began to shake his fist at us and make such grotesque and impotent gestures of defiance, that the soldiers all burst out into a loud roar of laughter, which made the poor "white trash" ten times more frantic.

At 4 o'clock P. M. the domes and spires of the Crescent City burst upon the view in one wide and splendid panorama, and at 5 P. M. we cast anchor, everyone delighted at the thought of once again touching terra firma. The Generals and Staff Officers at once went ashore, and I—thinking that a similar luxury was open to all civilians, whether repertorial or otherwise—greedily seized the opportunity afforded me of going in the same boat with Gen. HAMILTON and his Staff. It was only when I had got ashore, and was standing in the immense rotunda of the St. Charles Hotel, surrounded by a perfect galaxy of gold buttons and shoulder straps, that I noticed, for the first time, I was the only civilian who had left the vessel. The mishap created some little commotion, as an order—quite unknown to your correspondent—had gone forth that civilians were to remain on board; but as I was innocent, I had no difficulty in setting myself right at headquarters, and if the accident gave me any imaginary advantage over my brethren of the quill, they were more than avenged by the fact that I had only one night more of mosquitos and St. Charles prices than they had.

This morning everybody came on shore—officers and civilians; and any one might have taken New-Orleans for a New-England town. The great hotel of St. Charles, along whose vast and deserted corridors my footsteps echoed last night sepulchrally, is crowded to-day almost to overflowing; and every stranger now roaming about the streets, in temporary pursuit of novelty and amusement, being about as ready to expend cash as the New-Orleanists are to see that strange commodity, some few stores are, for the moment only, galvanized with a sort of spasmodic action.

The city is very quiet; yes, it is the quietness of the grave. Even an acquaintance with that most dismal of all dismal places—Norfolk, in Virginia—had hardly prepared me for the feeling of downright sadness which crept over me when I first entered New-Orleans this time. A small village may see its population diminish and its industry checked, without presenting any very formidable picture of desolation; but when one sees a vast metropolis like this suddenly struck by universal paralysis, and fairly rotting away in the putrid slime of secession, like one of the wretched planks on its own deserted quays, the effect is truly appalling.

New-Orleans is built upon a scale of magnificence that makes the contrast between her past prosperity and her present misery most painfully striking. Her principal public buildings, hotels, &c., are vast and palatial, often far surpassing, in pretension and architectural merit, buildings of a similar class in New-York. When I thought of the New-Orleans I had seen some years before, with its teeming streets and stores, its boundless levee literally jammed up with barrels, drays and cotton-bales, and the river bristling with masts and funnels along its redundant wharves; when I contrasted all this with its now gloomy, damp and deserted streets, and saw that same levee encumbered with nothing but a few broken planks and piles of oyster shells, here and there, I could almost have fancied myself wandering among the ruins of a second Herculaneum or Pompeii.

But the currency here is one of the most telling proofs of the utter prostration of all commercial dealings. We, in New-York, thought ourselves hard up for currency, but you need only to come here to learn how exceedingly well off you are. The way one of Uncle Sam's "greenbacks" melts in one's hands here, and the little scraps of dirty blue pasteboard which people give back for change, would be positively ludicrous if it were not so formidable.

Of the political aspect of the place—having only just arrived—I am, of course, not enabled yet to give any just estimate; but even the little I have already seen, induces me to think two things: First, That the spirit of rebellion is not extinct; but only kept down by fear; and, second, that Slavery in this region is already dead and buried beyond all resurrection. All the proclamations and counter-proclamations in the world cannot now effect the life of a thing that was shot dead by the man who fired the first gun at Fort Sumter.

New-Orleans—like every other place comparatively cut off from the world—lives upon rumors, and we have been regaled with all sorts of information of BURNSIDE being defeated, of our having taken Vicksburgh, &c., &c. One item of fact I can now give you, however, and that is an important one; Maj.-Gen. Butler has been superseded to-day by Maj.-Gen. Banks. I reserve all comments for my next letter.

Mystery Clearing—Ho! for Baton Rouge—Scenes and Incidents in going up the River—Arrival before Baton Rouge—Challenge of the Iron-Clad Essex Refused—Our Flag on the State House of Baton Rouge—Scenes and Incidents There.

BATON ROUGE, LA., Wednesday, Dec. 17, 1862.

We were not permitted long to enjoy the comforts of city life in New-Orleans, for our leaders, this time, seem to be utterly opposed to anything like letting grass grow under our feet,

As I mentioned in my last letter, we arrived at the Crescent City on Sunday evening, and on Monday night it was suddenly reported that an expedition of very great consequence was going up the river as far as Baton Rouge, and perhaps further, at daybreak to-morrow. This caused considerable flutter among the members of the Press, and left us but very little time to make arrangements; most of us being compelled to remain up the greater part of the night writing our letters, after having obtained the necessary permission from Gen. BANKS to accompany the expedition.

We did not get off quite so early as anticipated; but at 10½ o'clock Drum-Major A. B. CHASE—the leader of the glee club, who had so often delighted us during the voyage—sounded his bugle, the shore plank was hauled away, and we were off upon our exciting and momentous mission, in a piercing cold northern wind, that smacked more of New-York than New-Orleans.

Immediately after us, came gliding along the beautiful little screw propeller Mary Boardman, crowded with troops, then the Northern Light, United States and a number of other transports whose names and in what numbers I will not state, although fully cognizant, as the enumeration would be about as uninteresting as it is contraband. But the spectacle was truly grand as they all came up the river together, now running alongside of each other, exchanging playful or bantering remarks from their crowded decks, and then dropping off again and spreading themselves apart on the broad surface of the Mississippi, in the most picturesque positions imaginable.

In the evening a ceremony took place on board, which will long be remembered by all who were present. Overcome by the fatigue of the past night, I had laid down in my state-room for a little rest, when I heard singing in the large saloon adjoining, and, on going out, found that the officers, and as many soldiers as could be crowded together below had assembled for Divine service. The chaplain—Rev. Mr. LANE, of Lawrence, Massachusetts, made a prayer and address, which, in fervor and deep pathos I never heard excelled; and all the surrounding circumstances—the fact that on the very morrow those he was addressing might be face to face with the enemy and many in the cold embrace of death—gave his words the most thrilling interest. I saw sturdy and brave-hearted men bow their heads in silence, and eyes that dare to look on Death in his most hideous shapes, glisten with tears, when allusions were made to the loved ones at home; but if every heart present melted under the feeling language of their pastor, I am sure they must have been nerved to any amount of human courage and endurance by the glowing picture he drew of a patriot's duty, and his devotion to country and principle. Mr. LANE is the same gentleman who, on the occasion of that terrible disaster, the falling of the Pemberton Mills at Lawrence, made one of the most impressive discourses.

THE EXPEDITION TO BATON ROUGE.

Immediately after Divine service was over, the Adjutant-General read the following order to the soldiers:

HEADQUARTERS EXPEDITION FOR BATON ROUGE, Dec. 16, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 2.—1. The following-named officers are announced as belonging to the staff at these headquarters, viz: Capt. Joseph Hibbert, Assistant Adjutant-General; Capt. Francis W. Perkins, Assistant Quartermaster; Capt. W. P. Cowle, Commissary of Subsistence; Lieut. John B. Brown, Aid-de-Camp; Surgeon Thomas B. Reed, Medical Director; Major D. C. Houston, Chief Engineer; Lieut. R. M. Hill, Chief of Ordnance; Major H. Robinson, volunteer Aid-de-Camp, of Gen. Banks' Expedition, are temporarily assigned to duty with this expedition. The above-named officers will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

2. Upon the debarkation of the troops of this expedition, no pillage or appropriation of property of any kind will, under any circumstances, be allowed. Regimental commanders will be held responsible for the faithful execution of this order. No private property will be disturbed or taken possession of, except in accordance with orders from these headquarters, and then only by the proper staff officers, who will give receipts to the owners for the same.

3. The troops will be prepared to debark in light marching order. By order of

BRIG.-GEN. GROVER,
Commanding-General.

J. H. HIBBERT, JR., A. A. G.

During the night we approached the fleet of gunboats which had preceded us, and Brig.-Gen. GROVER, the leader of our present expedition, went on board the flagship Richmond. When morning rose, calm, clear and beautiful, we found ourselves nearly at Baton Rouge, and under the protection of the redoubtable iron-clad Essex, the flagship Richmond, the Albatross, the Cayuga, Winona and Kahtadin—some in front and some behind us.

The order came for all of us to move up near to the Richmond, and immediately the whole fleet of transports were in motion, ours—the North Star—taking the lead, and we anchored right in front of the town, when not a soul was to be seen on the levee, except here and there a wandering contraband, although the rebels were thought to be present.

At 9 o'clock precisely, the Essex ranged herself broadside to the shore, (the United States and the Spaulding close to and immediately behind her,) and then thundered forth her first note of defiance to the enemy. The few moments that followed were exciting. "Will they reply?" was the foremost thought with everyone. Having no reply, the Essex fired another shot and waited, then repeated the dose six or eight times, the shells bursting directly over the woods where the enemy were supposed to be encamped, and the Cayuga followed suit, by firing one gun.

Finding that the enemy was not inclined to fight, the process of disembarking the troops immediately commenced, and a half hour had not elapsed before we had taken down the rebel signal flag, and the flag of the United States was proudly floating over the State House, placed there by a portion of the crew of the Essex. "Three cheers for the flag of the Union!" cried the jolly fellows from the shore, and the cheers were lustily given by the soldiers from every vessel within sound of the call. The ease with which we got possession of the place surprised everybody. There was no flag of truce business—no demand to surrender; we simply walked in and occupied our own.

THE CONDITION OF BATON ROUGE.

We took, of course, the opportunity of landing and going through the town,—every avenue and street of which, in the space of an hour, was guarded by our own sentinels. We learnt from such of the inhabitants as we conversed with, that the rebel forces there—variously estimated at from 500 to 800—had left the place only that morning; indeed, that they were not entirely away when the Essex fired her first gun. The skedaddle that then took place must have been amusing in the extreme, judging from the ludicrous description I heard an old sable aunty giving of her terrified and fugacious master, to a large group of our soldiers at a street corner, and with all the gesticulation and mimicry common to her race. We heard of only one man killed by our shelling—a member of FENNER'S New-Orleans Battery.

In walking through the town, we saw more than enough to corroborate all we heard of the rebels having so very recently occupied the same ground on which we were standing. In a Catholic Church, at which some had been present, the candles were still burning, and at the State House and Penitentiary—both standing with their doors wide open, and totally deserted—we found their morning fires still blazing. In the Penitentiary we also saw their mattresses lying neglected on the floor, precisely as they had sprung from them to take to their heels. The barracks had the white walls scrawled all over, in black and red chalk, with names, both of our own and the rebel soldiers, the place having changed masters three times already. Among the many noble rebel sentiments we found on the walls was this: "Death to all who worship negroes as their brethren. Damn Union." Another one read: "You are fighting for your negro brothers, not for the Union."

Baton Rouge is a much smaller place than a stranger would expect to find in the capital of Louisiana; for, even in prosperous times, her population cannot exceed 5,000. It is prettily situated on a bluff about 30 feet above the highest overflowing water-mark. The streets are level, and uniformly laid out with neat detached houses surrounded by piazzas and plenty of shade trees, and the only public buildings of any note are four or five churches, a college, the barracks, Penitentiary and State House. The latter, built in what might be best termed the wedding-cake-gothic style of architecture, is an edifice of considerable pretension.

But what a picture of desolation the whole presented as one's almost solitary footsteps echoed through the quiet and deserted streets! Scarcely a store of any kind open, and even those with nothing in them—every private house hermetically sealed, with here and there a melancholy female face furtively peeping through the jalousie blinds, or some meditative old man pacing alone his gloomy verandah, and evidently scowling his anathema at you as you pass; idle and neglected darkies, sauntering purposeless along, or grouped at distant intervals in knots of two or three, to discuss, in timid whispers, passing events, their relation to which they understand full well—were the only human objects that met the eye, except now and then we chanced to cross the path of some solitary "secesh" prowling about, with nothing for his hands to do but play with the bottom of his empty pockets, and who was sure to meet us with a fixed stare of defiance. Not a single white female or decently-dressed child to be seen in the streets, (most of them them having left, and the few remaining being concealed in their houses,) not the sound of a single wheel to break the painful silence, any more than in the water streets of Venice; the very dogs and other animals you chance to meet seem to hang their heads and tails in despondency, and even the poor bare-footed little urchins, who appear to divide the whole town with the darkies, have evidently forgotten what it is to play. Had some dreadful and unsparing pestilence just swept over Baton Rouge, it could not have presented a more gloomy and mournful spectacle than it did when we entered it this morning.

One thing struck me with surprise here, and that is the great intelligence I found among the poor little barefooted children that were wandering about the landing and streets, apparently without any home or protectors. I was sitting alone on the bluff, making a sketch of the river scene, when a whole bevy came round to watch me, conversing freely upon the merits and demerits of my picture, with all the acuteness and correctness of any full-grown critic. My note-book being open at my side, one of them—a little fellow between 9 and 10—began to read aloud from it for the benefit of his companions. This summary introduction of course brought about a conversation between us, and as the lighter the straw the better we see which way the wind blows, I am not sure but that the prattle of these little fellows gave me as good an insight into the real state of feeling toward us, among the adult white population, as I could have got from the latter themselves, even had they afforded me the chance.

"What are you all, youngsters? Union or Secesh?" I asked.

"Union, Sir," simultaneously exclaimed the half-dozen tiny voices, with a decision that surprised me.

"Oh, yes, it's very well to tell me that, with all those blue-coats coming up the hill; but were you not all Secesh yesterday?"

"No, SIR! we were always Union," firmly replied the leader—the same who had been reading from my note-book—"we ain't afraid of your soldiers, either; when they come here we know we are going to have something to eat."

"Don't you have anything to eat, then, when the rebels are here?"

"Scarcely anything, Sir; there isn't a thing they see they don't take;" and then the whole of them began eagerly, at once, to give his individual experience of cases of extortion and oppression among poor families, with which I could fill a column.

"But though you are for the Union, my little friends," I continued, "I guess your parents are all Secesh."

"No, Sir, mine ain't," cried one; "they took the oath."

"So did mine," chimed in all the others.

"Don't you think your parents took it because they were afraid of us?" I asked, turning to my young friend of the note-book.

"No, Sir; father and mother were always Union. I wish you could have seen how she took care of a sick Michigan soldier for three months; he used to call her mother, and the soldiers always loved father and mother. I wish I could show you my mother, Sir."

I said I would be delighted to see her, and shortly after set out with the boy, to show me through the town, which he did most effectually, pointing out not only every building and thing of note, but every well-known Union or Secesh dwelling in the place. I am sorry to say the former were in a lamentable minority, although there were some; and others again he told me had taken the oath, but he didn't think they were "good for much."

Upon the whole, from the information I gleaned during my visit to Baton Rouge—where I also had the opportunity of conversing with some of the few storekeepers whose establishments were still open—I am persuaded that, whatever the feelings of the wealthy may be, the sympathies of the poorest classes, and those who live by labor or trade, even if originally leaning toward the rebels, would now be toward us, if we come quickly and in power to pluck them from the abyss of misery into which they are plunged. Only let them, in their helplessness, feel that we have not only the will but the power to shield them with perfect impunity to themselves—only let the defeat of their leaders teach them that to come back under the good old flag of the Union they have nought to fear from

"Those pagod things of sabre sway,
With fronts of brass and feet of clay,"

And I believe, that even in this distant slave region, there is yet chance of fanning these feeble embers into a flame of devotion to the Union—Slavery or no Slavery.

We have heard here of a daring attack having been made on Sunday last, a little below Port Hudson, by the rebels upon the gunboat Winona. The latter vessel was lying quietly at anchor, early in the morning, and her decks being washed—when a concealed battery was opened upon her, and she was struck by a shot before the Essex could come to her relief. The two together then made short work of the matter and sent the rebels flying, after severe punishment. One man—the master's mate—was killed on board the Winona.

It is to be hoped the authorities are fully alive to the difficulties we have to encounter in this region. Incredible as it may seem—while New-York was in total ignorance, and nobody even on board of the "North Star" knew positively where our destination was—the people of Baton Rouge have, for the last three weeks, been constantly expecting us with a large land and naval force. The result is that Port Hudson—miles up the river from New Orleans—has already become or is fast becoming as difficult a place as Vicksburgh to take; and the troops they have already concentrated there are variously estimated at from ten to fifteen thousand men.

As at least ten days or a fortnight must elapse before this letter can be before your readers, there can be no possible harm in saying that whatever reinforcements may be destined for any important mission up the river would be much better here now, than "coming." If the rebels can get the chance they have, unfortunately, too often had, of concentrating in force to fall upon us in detail—they wont throw it away.

NEW-ORLEANS, Saturday, Dec. 20, 1862.

Having witnessed our bloodless but triumphant entry into Baton Rouge, and seen our zealous and enthusiastic men busily engaged in preparing comfortable quarters, under their gallant leader, Brig.-Gen. GROVER, I took my departure for this city, an opportunity having offered itself for my going in the swift little gunboat Albatross, Lieut. Commander HARP, of which I gladly availed myself, and which I am pleased to record here, as I received from the Commander and his gentlemanly officers that unbounded hospitality which is the leading characteristic of every true sailor.

My object in returning to New-Orleans was two-

THE PIRATE ALABAMA.

The Vanderbilt Steamship Ariel Captured by Her.

She is Released Under Bonds, After Three Days' Detention.

ARRIVAL OF THE ARIEL AT THIS PORT.

We published, yesterday, the particulars of the capture of the Vanderbilt steamship Ariel by the pirate Alabama, on her outward trip to Aspinwall. The following is the Purser's statement of the occurrence:

The Ariel was captured on her outward passage by the rebel steamer Alabama, under the following circumstances: On the 7th inst., at 1:30 P. M., when rounding Cape Maysi, the eastern point of Cuba, we saw a vessel about four miles to the westward, close under the high land of Cuba, bark-rigged, and under canvas. As there was nothing in her appearance indicating her to be a steamer, her smoke-pipe being down, no suspicions were aroused, till in a short time we saw she had furled her sails, raised her smoke-stack, and was rapidly nearing us under steam, the American flag flying at her peak. Such was her speed, in comparison to ours, that in about half an hour she had come up within half a mile of us, when she fired a lee gun, hauled down the American ensign and ran up the rebel flag. No attention was paid to the summons, and the Ariel was pushed to her utmost speed.

She then sailed across our wake, took a position on our port quarter, about 400 yards distant, and fired two guns almost simultaneously, one shot passing over the hurricane deck, between the walking-beam and smoke-stack, and the other hitting the foremast, and cutting it half away.

A body of United States Marines, consisting of 126 men, passengers on board the Ariel, had been drawn up and armed; but the officers in command deemed it worse than folly to resist, as we could plainly see they were training a full broadside to bear upon us, and Capt. JONES gave orders to stop the ship and haul down the ensign.

A boat then put off to us, and the boarding officer, on coming aboard, at once assured the passengers that none should be molested, and that all baggage and private property should be respected. He then demanded the keys to the special-locker, together with all the ship's papers and letters, and informed the Captain he must be in readiness to go on board the Alabama with him, where he was detained as a hostage until the next day.

The money in the ship, amounting to $9,500, was taken off, and the prize crew, twenty in number, all well armed, put on board. The engine-room was taken in charge by two engineers from the Alabama. The officers and marines on board the Ariel were paroled, and their arms taken, as well as some belonging to the ship.

Both vessels lay off the Cape during the night and part of the next day. On the afternoon of the 8th our sails were thrown overboard and the steam-valve taken away, in order to prevent our escape should they give chase to any other vessel, as they were expecting to capture the Champion also, and had been lying in wait for several days at this point for that purpose. The same night our valve was returned, and the intention of landing us at St. Domingo changed to Kingston, Jam.

Both vessels were then headed for that place, and on the 9th inst., at 9 P. M., we arrived off Point Morant, about 40 miles from Kingston. Near this point the Alabama gave chase and boarded a vessel, from which some information was received, which induced Capt. SEMMES to again change his mind, and take heavy bonds for the ship and cargo, permitting us to resume our voyage. The reason given was, that this vessel had reported yellow fever raging in Kingston, and he would not subject our passengers to its ravages; but we were afterward informed at Morant that no yellow fever had prevailed there for some time.

The conduct of those officers and crew of the Alabama in charge of this ship was extremely courteous. They were in regular communication with the United States, both by letters and papers, and were fully cognizant of our days of sailing, and that no cruisers were in these waters to intercept them. For this reason, the specie to come by the Ariel was left at Aspinwall, as Capt. JONES did not think it prudent to bring it.

APPEARANCE OF THE ARIEL—STATEMENT OF PURSER WHEELER, ETC., ETC.

The Ariel is now lying at her dock, Pier No. 3, North River, where she arrived at 1 o'clock yesterday morning. All day yesterday she was the object of the most eager curiosity on the part of the public, and hundreds of persons visited her to witness for themselves the results of her encounter with the famous "290." Judging from her appearance, she received very mild treatment at the hands of the rebel privateer, and, considering how other vessels have been served, she may be regarded as extremely lucky. The only scars left on her by the pirate are the single round-shot through her foremast, which shows excellent markmanship on the part of the rebel gunners, if nothing more. The shot was fired from the stern of the Alabama and passed directly through the centre of the foremast, about eight feet above the hurricane deck. The mast where the shot struck is about eighteen inches thick, and the shell passed through the iron rod which ran up on its side, and carried away just one-half of the mast, making a clean cut of about ten inches or a foot in length, up and down. The missile that did the damage, as we learn from Purser F. A. WHEELER, was a 68-pound 8-inch shell. It was fired by Lieut. ST. CLAIR, of South Carolina, who was among the rebel officers that subsequently boarded the Ariel, and who gave the information to Purser WHEELER. According to St. CLAIR's statement, it was only by the merest chance that the shot was not sent through the cabin. As the Ariel had not paid due respect to the other shots fired over her, he said he had resolved to put the next one through her hull, and had just aimed the gun in that direction and was about to fire, when Capt. SEMMES said, "raise your gun a little, and if she don't stop then, we will give her a broadside." While elevating the range, in pursuance of this order, he caught sight of the foremast, and immediately sent the shell whizzing through its centre, as described above. The Alabama was only from 300 to 400 yards distant at the time, and had not the Ariel hauled down her flag immediately and hove to, the next shot from the pirate would doubtless have caused great destruction of life.

Mr. WHEELER says that when the Alabama was first discovered, the Ariel was about five miles from land on the east end of Cuba. Had they not been deceived by the American colors which floated from the Alabama, the Ariel would have had time to run in near enough to the shore to get on neutral ground; but the Captain supposed it to be a friendly vessel until she fired her first shot and hoisted the rebel flag, when it was too late to escape her.

The incidents of the capture, as detailed in the letter of our Panama correspondent, are so full as to leave little else to be added. The Purser and other officers, with whom our reporter conversed yesterday, confirm, in every particular, the facts as there stated. They all agree in saying that the officers and crew who boarded the Ariel from the Alabama conducted themselves in a gentlemanly manner, and took especial pains to allay the fears of the passengers. Officers LOW, ST. CLAIR and two engineers were the first to come on board the Ariel, and the first words spoken by LOW were to assure the ladies that they need have no cause for alarm, and might consider themselves as safe from danger or insult as though they were in their own parlors. His remarks immediately restored quiet among the passengers, and in a very short time they were all talking and chatting together on the best of terms. Many of the passengers who were frightened nearly out of their wits when the rebels first came aboard, had got so bold before they left that they would salute them with—"How are you, secesh?" and such like expressions, which were always taken in good part. The privateers retained possession of the Ariel from 2 o'clock, P. M., on the 7th of December, to 11 P. M., on the 9th, when arrangements were effected between Capt. JONES and the rebel Captain, SEMMES, for her release. These arrangements, as stated elsewhere, were, that Capt. JONES gave a bond to Capt. SEMMES in the sum of $250,000, to be paid in thirty days after the independence of the Confederate States is acknowledged by the U. S. Government. This bond is of course binding upon the owner of the Ariel, Commodore VANDERBILT, and the agent of the line, Mr. ALLEN, yesterday had an interview with Capt. JONES, in which he entirely approved of the course he had taken. It was the most earnest desire of Capt. JONES to fight the Alabama rather than surrender, but as the Ariel only had one 12-pound rifle gun on board, the hopelessness of such a contest was evident to all. It was a great mortification to Capt. JONES to be compelled to haul down his flag, and the officers of the Ariel say he has been as cross as a bear ever since, but any other course, under the circumstances, would have been useless. Capt. JONES was yesterday confined to his bed at the Washington Hotel with illness, and was unable to receive any company except the agent of the Steamship Company, Mr. ALLEN. He was the only person who went on board the Alabama from the Ariel, and his statement may be found in full in our correspondence from Panama.

The Purser of the Ariel says he was informed by the rebel officers and crew who came on board the Ariel that the Alabama had a crew of 126 men, who were mostly English, and who were shipped by the Government shipping master in Liverpool, and knew where they were going and for what purpose. They left Liverpool in another steamer, and joined the Alabama at one of the Azores Islands. Before they came aboard of the Alabama, Capt. SEMMES made a speech to them, in which he told them what business they were bound on, and said if there was any one among them who was not ready to stand by him through thick and thin, he wished him to signify it before they started. After listening to the address of Capt. SEMMES, three of the men backed down, and refused to go on board the Alabama.

The rebel officers informed the Purser that Capt. SEMMES had a wife and daughter in Cincinnati and another daughter in Philadelphia.

OUR CORRESPONDENCE BY THE ARIEL.

The Capture of the Ariel by the Alabama —The Incidents of the Occasion.

PANAMA, Tuesday, Dec. 16, 1862.

The principal topic of interest among us, for the past few days, as you may well imagine, has been the boarding and robbery of the Ariel by the Confederate steamer "290," or Alabama. It is probable ere this you have had the main facts, so what I may write can be placed under the head of "further particulars." My facts I get from Com. SARTORI and Capt. JONES.

On Sunday, 7th inst., at 2 P. M., just as the passengers in the first cabin had sat down to dinner, a report was brought to Capt. JONES of "steam war ship in sight." No alarm was created by this announcement; Capt. JONES excusing himself to his dinner companions, said he would see what she was like. On ascending to the deck, the vessel was about four miles off, under Cape Maize, and was just coming out of the sun-glare. She had an American flag flying, but Capt. JONES exclaimed: "If that isn't an English rig, you may shoot me!" He ordered his Engineer to put on all steam, thinking to run away from the suspected vessel. He soon saw that the bark was rapidly overhauling him, and in a few minutes she fired a blank shot. Capt. JONES paid no attention, but kept on his way. A moment after, the bark hoisted the Confederate flag, and bang! bang! two shells passed over the Ariel. One was an hundred-pound steel pointed missile, which explodes immediately on striking the object, but this shell fortunately passed over the vessel without touching her. The other, a round, common fuse shell, struck the foremast above the hurricane deck, cutting nearly its size from the mast.

In the meantime, the 140 officers and marines on board, under Major GARLAND, had been drawn up on the deck of the Ariel, with their arms, prepared for resistance. But the character of the craft having now been fully ascertained, and the futility of defence being clearly apparent, notwithstanding the remonstrances of Capt. JONES, who wanted to fight, and who declared he would never lower his flag so long as he could fight, the marines were disarmed and ordered below. Then the Stars and Stripes came down, and the Ariel surrendered. At this time the Ariel was going about 8½ knots—fast, for her—and the Alabama 11 knots, without sail, and only under 11 pounds of steam—so says Capt. JONES. Her fires had been banked, and less than an hour before the Ariel hauled down her flag, she had started them up. Capt. SEMMES told Capt. JONES that under 17 pounds of steam he had made 13½ knots, but had never worked his steam up any higher, as he never had occasion to do so. He said he could make 15 knots under steam.

By 3 P. M., a boat from the Alabama, with twelve men, under the command of Lieut. LOW, a young Georgian, the men armed with pistols and cutlasses, was alongside. At this time, the consternation and fright among the passengers, particularly among the women, was indescribable. The least many of them expected was to be robbed and then have their throats cut. The more prudent had hidden away their money, watches and jewelry, the best they could, and the more cunning had passed their personal articles of value into the hands of British and French passengers. Many who had sworn allegiance to Uncle Samuel, and who had eaten his salt for twenty years, suddenly forgot to aspirate their h's, and not one of the Jews could speak English. As Lieut. LOW, in his neat uniform and bland smiling face, stepped on deck and politely lifted his cap, the fears began to slightly subside. The first thing he did was to assure the passengers that not a a hair of their heads should be plucked out, and not a dollar of personal property taken.

Observing that there were United States officers and marines on board, Lieut. LOW communicated with Capt. SEMMES, and the latter ordered that Capt. JONES should come on board the Alabama. When Lieut. LOW returned, he paroled all the officers and marines, the conditions being that they "should not serve the United States in any manner during the war." To a question of Capt. SARTORI as to whether this prevented the marines and soldiers from serving in the forts of California, to which most of them were destined, he replied, "Yes—you are to do no service of any kind for your Government."

Lieut. LOW called for the manifests, and finding some money on them, took possession of $8,000 in Treasury notes, belonging to Messrs. WELLS, FARGO & Co., and $1,500 in silver for Nicaragua, belonging to PEYTON MIDDLETON, Esq., late United States Special Inspector of Customs in Panama, and to his American partner in Nicaragua, E. S. LANE, Esq. Being assured by Purser WHEELER that the Ariel had no letter mail, he did not overhaul the sacks, and in fact nothing in that line was disturbed. WELLS, FARGO & Co.'s sacks, the private sacks of the Panama Railroad Company, the South and Central American and Panama mails, and even the State Department sacks for the United States Consul at Aspinwall, containing his own correspondence and that for other Consuls, Ministers and naval officers, came safely to hand.

Lieut. LOW ordered all the officers to give up their swords, and all the soldiers and marines their arms, and these were taken on board the Alabama. He compelled Capt. JONES to bond the ship for $125,000, the cargo for $123,000, and freight for $12,000, to be paid within 30 days after the establishment of the independence of the Confederate States.

The Lieutenant, before he left, ordered all the sails of the Ariel to be cut away and thrown overboard, but no other property was damaged or destroyed, save the liquors of the ship, and not a dollars' worth was taken out of her except the money. The liquors were destroyed by request of Capt. SARTORI and Maj. GARLAND, as a precaution against their own men, who they feared might get at them in the confusion, and become unmanageable now that their officers were disarmed. The heads of the whisky barrels were knocked in, and the liquors in the bar thrown overboard. In this connection, it may not be amiss to say that Capt. SEMMES complained bitterly to Capt. JONES of the false reports he averred had been made by the commanders o some of the sailing vessels he had taken, particularly of the master of the Lamplighter, who reported that the first thing the officers and sailors demanded on boarding him was liquor. He said that not a drop of liquor was used by his men on that ship, but that it was destroyed immediately she was boarded for fear his men might get at it and make brutes of themselves.

Lieut. LOW ordered the Ariel to keep company with the Alabama, and both ships steamed toward Jamaica. At night he again visited the Ariel, and took away with him one of her steam-valves, so as to temporarily disable the engine. Of course, the Ariel drifted about, (it was calm weather,) and the Alabama left her to look for other prey. Capt. JONES was informed by Capt. SEMMES that his passengers would be landed at a point on San Domingo, which has only a few huts, and is at a great distance from supplies. To this Capt. JONES earnestly remonstrated. "For God's sake, Capt. SEMMES, don't leave us there!" exclaimed Capt. JONES. "What in Heaven's name are 850 persons—a third of them women and children—to live on there?" He then said he would land them in Jamaica, for he was determined to burn the ship. He said VANDERBILT had given one of the finest steamers in the world to the Government with which to run him down, and he would destroy everything of his he fell in with.

The next day, Monday, the valve was restored, and the Ariel ordered to keep company as before. Every little while the Alabama would dart off, leaving the Ariel, on perceiving a sail, give chase to her, and finding she was not American, returned to her game, which she was enabled to do, from the fact she could steam two miles to the Ariel's one. At night the valve was again taken out.

On Tuesday, the ships kept company, the Alabama occasionally going on a little cruise after Yankee crafts till half-past 10 at night, when they made a light on Jamaica. Capt. SEMMES then informed Capt. JONES that he would not put his passengers on shore at Port Royal, as the yellow fever was prevailing there, but that he might proceed on his voyage.

At 6 in the morning, on Wednesday, Capt. JONES, having kept close in to land, spoke a branch pilot in Morant Bay, who agreed to take a letter to the Mayor of Morant, for the United States Consul at Kingston. Capt. SARTORI wrote to the Mayor, telling him it was very important the letter should be dispatched at once, and he has no doubt the Consul got the paper by 12 o'clock same day. Neither the pilot or the Mayor were informed of the contents of the letter, or of the occurrences here detailed. If the Consul is not afraid of taking responsibilities, as he should not be, in such important matters, he chartered a vessel, and a steam one, if possible, to take the news to Santiago de Cuba, a short distance, from which there is a telegraph to Havana, and where there may have been some United States war-steamers.

All the officers and passengers I have talked with say that Lieut. LAW acted in the most gentlemanly, and even courteous manner, and Capt. JONES says the same of Capt. SEMMES. In fact, all the Ariel's folks appear to have been perfectly fascinated and enchanted by Lieut. LAW. He soothed the ladies, patted the children on the head, kissed the ugliest-looking as well as the prettiest babies, and made himself generally agreeable. He told Com. SARTORI he did only his duty in molesting the Ariel, and remarked, "You, Capt. SARTORI, would do the same thing were your country treated so outrageously as mine has been." He allowed Capt. SARTORI to keep a favorite fowling-piece he had with him, and did many other gracious things.

All great villains, if they are smart, are courteous Had the 100 pound shell gone through the Ariel, the passengers, what there would have been left of them, would have thought differently of their captor.

Capt. SEMMES, in his conversation with Capt. JONES, talked a good deal about the pacific, and knew all about our ships-of-war there. Capt. JONES thinks that when the West Indies gets too hot for him, he will turn up in our waters here, but I think not. He might make a raid upon our whalers, and he says he is particularly anxious to cripple New-England men—but the facilities for such business as his are much less on the Pacific than on the Atlantic. The thing that seemed to trouble him most, was the impossibility of his burning VANDERBILT's ship, which he could not do on account of the passengers. The fact is, he had won an elephant in a raffle. He could not drop them down in any desert place, and he knew he could not land them in Kingston, or in the port of any powerful nation.

Capt. SEMMES told Capt. JONES that he coaled last at Martinique—that when he left port the San Jacinto trained a gun upon him, when the fort immediately trained her guns upon the San Jacinto, and she desisted from the attack.

I wouldn't like to say that Capt. SEMMES is a fool, in the face of many evidences to the contrary, but in scaring his bird before she got fat, he has lost the chance of a good dinner a little later. Had he waited till the Ariel returned, he might have got a million or so of dollars from her. Now she will not give him a chance. And while he was fiddling with the Ariel he lost the Champion, which passed through the Islands on the 9th.

The marines and sailors one hundred in number, went to San Francisco on the 13th on the Constitution, it being probable they will be exchanged soon. The Panama Contingent, 24 in number, will go as passengers to San Francisco on the United States sloop-of-war Cyane, and wait for an exchange.

The names of the officers paroled are: Maj. ADDISON GARLAND; Capt. DAVID M. COHEN; First Lieut. Edward McElrath; First. Lieut. W. H. McKean; First Lieut. F. H. Corrie; Second Lieut. A. W. Ward; Second Lieut. C. Daniel; Com. Conrad Sartori, of United States sloop-of-war Cyane; Lieut. Tecumseh Steece, United States Navy.

Capt. JONES leaves behind about $600,000 in specie, and in so doing acts under advice of Hon. DAVID K. CARTER, United States Minister Resident at Bolivia; FRANCIS W. RICE, United States Consul at Aspinwall; Col. A. R. McKEE, United States Consul at Panama; WM. PARKER, Superintendent Panama Railroad Company; Lieutenant-Commanding United States brig Bainbridge; Lieut. DOYLE, Commanding United States ship Warren, and merchants of repute and standing on the Isthmus.

PROCLAMATION OF JEFF. DAVIS.

The Retaliatory Policy Fully Inaugurated.

Gen. Butler to be Executed for the Hanging of Mumford.

Fulmination Against Slaves Found in Arms and Officers Commanding Them.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES—A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, a communication was addressed on the 6th day of July last, 1862, by Gen. ROBERT E. LEE, acting under the instructions of the Secretary of War of the Confederate States of America, to Gen. H. W. HALLECK, Commander-in-Chief of the United States Army, informing the latter that a report had reached this Government that WM. B. MUMFORD, a citizen of the Confederate States, had been executed by the United States authorities at New-Orleans, for having pulled down the United States flag in that city before its occupation by the United States forces, and calling for a statement of the facts, with a view of retaliation if such an outrage had really been committed under the sanction of the authorities of the United States;

And whereas, (no answer having been received to said letter,) another letter was, on the 2d of August last, (1862,) addressed by Gen. LEE, under my instructions, to Gen. HALLECK, renewing the inquiries in relation to the execution of the said MUMFORD, with the information that in the event of not receiving a reply within fifteen days, it would be assumed that the fact was true, and was sanctioned by the Government of the United States;

And whereas, an answer, dated on the 7th of August last, 1862, was addressed to Gen. LEE by Gen. H. W. HALLECK, the said General-in-Chief of the armies of the United States, alleging sufficient causes for failure to make early reply to said letter of the 6th July, asserting that "No authentic information had been received in relation to the execution of MUMFORD, but measures will be immediately taken to ascertain the facts of the alleged execution," and promising that Gen. LEE should be duly informed thereof;

And whereas, on the 28th of November last, (1862,) another letter was addressed, under my instructions, by ROBERT OULD, Confederate agent for the exchange of prisoners, under the cartel between the two Governments, to Lieut.-Col. W. H. LUDLOW, agent of the United States under said cartel, informing him that the explanation promised in the said letter of Gen. HALLECK, of 7th of August last, had not yet been received, and that if no answer was sent to the Government within fifteen days from the delivery of this last communication, it would be considered that an answer is declined:

And whereas, a letter dated on the 3d day of the present month of December, the said Lieut.-Col. LUDLOW apprized the said ROBERT OULD that the above recited communication of the 19th of November had been received and forwarded to the Secretary of War of the United States, and whereas this last delay of fifteen days allowed for answer has elapsed and no answer has been received;

And whereas, in addition to the tacit admission resulting from the above refusal to answer, I have received evidence fully establishing the truth of the fact that the said WILLIAM B. MUMFORD, a citizen of the Confederacy, was actually and publicly executed in cold blood by hanging, after the occupation of the City of New-Orleans by the forces under Gen. BENJAMIN F. BUTLER, when said MUMFORD was an unresisting and non-combatant captive, and for no offence even alleged to have been committed by him subsequent to the date of the capture of said city;

And whereas, the silence of the Government of the United States, and its maintaining of said BUTLER in high office under its authority for many months after his commission of an act that can be viewed in no other light than as a deliberate murder, as well as of numerous other outrages and atrocities hereafter to be mentioned, afford evidence too conclusive that the said Government sanctions the conduct of the said BUTLER, and is determined that he shall remain unpunished for these crimes;

Now, therefore, I, JEFFERSON DAVIS, President of the Confederate States of America, and in their name, do pronounce and declare the said BENJAMIN F. BUTLER to be a felon, deserving of capital punishment. I do order that he shall no longer be considered or treated simply as a public enemy of the Confederate States of America, but as an outlaw and common enemy of mankind, and that, in the event of his capture, the officer in command of the capturing force do cause him to be immediately executed by hanging.

And I do further order that no commissioned officer of the United States, taken captive, shall be released on parole, before exchange, until the said BUTLER shall have met with due punishment for his crimes.

And whereas, the hostilities waged against this Confederacy by the forces of the United States, under the command of said BENJAMIN F. BUTLER, have borne no resemblance to such warfare as is alone permissible by the rules of international law, or the usage of civilization, but have been characterized by repeated atrocities and outrages, among the large number of which the following may be cited as examples:

Peaceful and aged citizens, unresisting captives and non-combatants, have been confined at hard labor, with hard chains attached to their limbs, and are still so held in dungeons and fortresses:

Others have been submitted to a like degrading punishment for selling medicines to the sick soldiers of the Confederacy:

The soldiers of the United States have been invited and encouraged in general orders to insult and outrage the wives, the mothers, and the sisters of our citizens:

Helpless women have been torn from their homes, and subjected to solitary confinement, some in fortresses and prisons, and one especially on an island of barren sand under a tropical sun; have been fed with loathsome rations that had been condemned as unfit for soldiers, and have been exposed to the vilest insults:

Prisoners of war, who surrendered to the naval forces of the United States, on agreement that they should be released on parole, have been seized and kept in close confinement:

Repeated pretexts have been sought or invented for plundering the inhabitants of the captured city, by fines levied and collected under threats of imprisoning recusants at hard labor with ball and chain. The entire population of New-Orleans have been forced to elect between starvation by the confiscation of all their property, and taking an oath against conscience to bear allegiance to the invader of their country:

Egress from the city has been refused to those whose fortitude withstood the test, and even to lone and aged women, and to helpless children: and after being ejected from their homes, and robbed of their property, they have been left to starve in the streets or subsist on charity:

The slaves have been driven from the plantations in the neighborhood of New-Orleans until their owners would consent to share their crops with the Commanding General, his brother, ANDREW J. BUTLER, and other officers, and when such consent has been extorted the slaves have been restored to the plantations, and there compelled to work under the bayonets of the guards of United States soldiers. Where that partnership was refused, armed expeditions have been sent to the plantations to rob them of everything that was susceptible of removal:

And even slaves, too aged or infirm for work, have, in spite of their entreaties, been forced from the homes provided by their owners, and driven to wander helpless on the highway:

By a recent general order, number 91, the entire property in that part of Louisiana west of the Mississippi River has been sequestered for confiscation, and officers have been assigned to duty with orders to gather up and collect the personal property, and turn over to the proper officers upon their receipts, such of said property as may be required for the use of the United States army; to collect together all the other personal property and bring the same to New-Orleans, and cause it to be sold at public auction to the highest bidders—an order which, if executed, condemns to punishment, by starvation, at least a quarter of a million of human beings, of all ages, sexes, and conditions, and of which the execution, although forbidden to military officers by the orders of President LINCOLN, is in accordance with the confiscation law of our enemies, which he has effected to be enforced through the agency of civil officials:

And finally, the African slaves, have not only been incited to insurrection by every license and encouragement, but numbers of them have actually been armed for a servile war—a war in its nature far exceeding the horrors and most merciless atrocities of savages;

And whereas, the officers under command of the said BUTLER have been, in many instances, active and zealous agents in the commission of these crimes, and no instance is known of the refusal of any one of them to participate in the outrages above narrated;

And whereas, the President of the United States has, by public and official declarations, signified not only his approval of the effort to excite servile war within the Confederacy, but his intention to give aid and encouragement thereto, if these independent States shall continue to refuse submission to a foreign power after the 1st day of January next, and has thus made known that all appeal to the law of nations, the dictates of reason, and the instincts of humanity would be addressed in vain to our enemies, and that they can be deterred from the commission of these crimes only by the terrors of just retribution:

Now, therefore, I, JEFFERSON DAVIS, President of the Confederate States of America, and acting by their authority, appealing to the Divine Judge in attestation that their conduct is not guided by the passion of revenge, but that they reluctantly yield to the solemn duty of redressing, by necessary severity, crimes of which their citizens are the victims, do issue this my proclamation, and by virtue of my authority as Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the Confederate States, do order:

First—That all the commissioned officers in the command of said BENJAMIN F. BUTLER be declared not entitled to be considered as soldiers engaged in honorable warfare, but as robbers and criminals deserving death; and that they and each of them be, whenever captured, reserved for execution

Second—That the private soldiers and non-commissioned officers in the army of said BUTLER be considered as only the instruments used for the commission of crimes perpetrated by his orders, and not as free agents; that they, therefore, be treated when captured as prisoners of war, with kindness and humanity, and be sent home on the usual parole that they will in no manner aid or serve the United States in any capacity during the continuance of this war, unless duly exchanged.

Third—That all negro slaves captured in arms be at once delivered over to the executive authorities of the respective States to which they belong, to be dealt with according to the laws of said States.

Fourth—That the like orders be executed in all cases with respect to all commissioned officers of the United States when found serving in company with said slaves in insurrection against the authorities of the different States of this Confederacy.

In testimony whereof I have signed these presents and caused the seal of the Confederate States of America to be affixed thereto, at the City of Richmond, on this 23d day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

J. P. BENJAMIN, Secretary of State.

ARRIVAL OF THE EUROPA'S MAILS.

Comments of the English Press on American Affairs.

The mails by the steamship Europa reached this City from Boston, yesterday morning, and we give below such extracts from our files as we can find room for this morning.

The steamship Glasgow also arrived at this port yesterday, but her advices are anticipated by those of the Europa.

THE PRESIDENT'S ABOLITION PROCLAMATION.

The following circular has been issued to the ministers of all religious denominations by the London Emancipation Society:

LONDON EMANCIPATION SOCIETY,
No. 65 Fleet-street, E. C., Dec. 9.

REV. AND DEAR SIR: We beg very respectfully to urge upon you the propriety of giving prominence to the subject of negro emancipation in the religious services, which, in this country at least, always herald the advent of a new year. President LINCOLN has appointed the 1st of January, 1863, as the day on which he will, by virtue of the powers vested in him, declare Slavery to be abolished in the rebel States. That day will form the commencement of a new era in American history—an era in which the whole power and authority of the Federal Government will be employed, for the first time, to effect the overthrow of a system that embodies in itself every iniquity known to man. It is, therefore, we think, a day eminently worthy of special recognition on the part of the great religious communities of England. Every action of the Christian public cannot fail to rejoice in the prospect of the slave's deliverance, and to pray that Divine Providence may bless the efforts of those who are endeavoring to uproot at once and for all an institution which has sought to degrade to the level of brutes four millions of human beings. We ask, then, that in your New-Year's services, the bondmen of the Southern States may be specially remembered, and that in every church and chapel throughout Great Britain, an aspiration for their speedy release from captivity may rise to a just Heaven.

We do not appeal to you from any political motive, or for any mere party object. We ask only that, in this crisis of the negro's fate, you will remember them that are in bonds as bound with them. Many among the slaves and oppressed colored people of America are now looking to England for some token of her good will. Let us give it to them at a time when it will excite the deepest gratitude on their part, and exert the greatest influence on the public opinion of the United States, both North and South.

In America, at the present time, the real opinion of this country is grievously misunderstood. There are many in both sections of the republic who imagine that we have departed from the faith of our fathers. The enemies of human freedom, and of the pure religion of Christ, exult in the belief that the spirit of CLARKSON, of WILBERFORCE, and of FOWELL BUXTON, has become extinct in the breasts of their successors; that the immortal principles which were embodied in the Acts abolishing the slave-trade and West India slavery have ceased to be dear to us as a nation. This should not be. To allow such an impression any longer to exist, to give color to it by a seeming apathy to the cause of the negro and to the traditions of an illustrious past, is to cast dishonor upon the character and the religion of England. To you, then, we make our appeal; to you who are the successors, and even in many instances the colleagues and friends of that noble band of ministers and churches, to whose labors far more than to those of statesmen or political parties the abolition of Slavery in the British colonies must be attributed. We beg of you to render now, as far as you may be able, the same service to humanity which you rendered in that great struggle, and, by the expression of your religious feeling in the way we have indicated, to hasten the day when Slavery and caste shall cease to pollute the soil of America. Signed on behalf of the Committee,

WILLIAM EVANS, Chairman.
F. W. CHESSON, Secretary.

JEFF. DAVIS' PROCLAMATION FORESHADOWED.

From the London Standard, Dec. 11.

Let the Democrats compel Mr. LINCOLN to make war like the chief of a constituted Government, and not like the head of a tribe of savages, and redeem the fame of their country, which is sullied every day by crimes which surprise and disgust the civilized world.

It is high time that something of this kind should be done; for there is every reason to fear that murders in cold blood, which have hitherto been the exception, are likely to become the rule of the war. As yet the Confederates have shed no blood save on the field of battle. The Northerners have committed several disgraceful assassinations, all of which, except the most recent, our Americanizing contemporaries seem to have forgotten. There was the murder of Mr. MUMFORD, at New-Orleans; there were a score of murders at Nashville; there were citizens of Missouri shot in front of their own homes and in presence of their families; and last, there was that atrocious murder at Palmyra, for which even the Daily News fails to find any excuse or palliation. At last the Confederate Government is forced to threaten reprisals. We are surprised to find that the organ of the American Embassy disputes their right to do so, and still more surprised that it should pretend to expect that Mr. LINCOLN will bring the assassin MCNEIL to justice. If the Federal Government intended to hang that officer, it has had time to do so; and it has done nothing. And if it do not intend to punish him, what can Mr. DAVIS do but retaliate? Our cotemporary says that retaliation would be murder; but he cannot be so childishly ignorant as to believe what he says. Retaliation is the law of war; the right and the duty of a belligerent who finds that his enemy cannot otherwise be induced to conform to the usages of war-making nations. It is the punishment which international law prescribes for crimes like M'NEIL's, as hanging is the punishment which our municipal law awards to criminals of the same class, and the General who executes reprisals, and the Government which orders them, are but the ministers of the law, as are the Judge and the executioner who rid the world of the M'Neils, Butlers and Turchins of private life. In ordering that if the murderer of Palmyra be not surrendered reprisals shall be made, President DAVIS is only performing a painful duty which he could not any longer avoid.

CONFEDERATE RETALIATION.

From the London Times.

To brave and earnest men all things are possible; and the world has no doubt that even out of this terrible trial, wherein invulnerable fleets and a servile insurrection will be added to the force of invading armies, the nation which Mr. JEFFERSON DAVIS has created will still at the end of the campaign come out a nation. They have, however, a fearful ordeal to go through, and the only consolation to them is that if they survive it, as we believe they will, it must be the last.

It must be the last; for the human race, as heretofore in its various forms of civilization, will not be able to endure more than one more chapter of this war. The new aspect of its horrors is more appalling than any it has yet presented. The wholesale confiscation of half a continent is a strong measure; the murders at New-Orleans were also strong measures; Gen. POPE's system of living upon the plunder of a defenceless country was another very strong measure; but the greatest excess of all was the murder in cold blood by Gen. MCNEIL of those ten men in Missouri. If repisal once begins, it is impossible to foresee the end of it. Retaliation will beget retaliation, and Mr. LINCOLN and Mr. DAVIS will go on hanging their prisoners of war until nothing is left to do but to hang and slay without quarter. The North seem to be hurrying on their heavy iron-clad fleet to scare the European Powers from interference. It is a quarrel with which England has certainly no desire to interfere by force, as England has abundantly shown. At a time when Federal America had no navy, and when an order to our Admiral on the station would have scattered the blockading ships, and created a free barter of arms for cotton, we never thought of taking such an advantage of our power. Now, when Federal America is somewhat better prepared, we have as little inclination—neither more nor less—to mix in the contest. But we cannot look on long at a war of reprisals such as that which Gen. M'NEIL has commenced, which Mr. Jefferson Davis is about to continue, and which the Federal American Press seem prepared to accept. It may be, as the American papers intimate, that any offer of mediation would be met on the part of the Washington Government with a definiteness which will leave Europeans no doubt what will be the result—which we presume means insult, defiance, and war: but if they insist on their right to fight, they must learn to fight like human beings. Even we, who "do not fight for an idea," might have to join in a crusade to put down atrocities such as all parties now foretell.

LATEST BY THE EUROPA.

LONDON, Saturday, Dec. 13.

A letter from a Paris correspondent in the Independance Belge comments in the following terms upon the impression produced in the French capital by the account of the reception accorded in America to the offer of mediation by the Emperor's government.

"The Government received dispatches yesterday from M. MERCIER, our Minister at Washington. Their contents have not yet been made public; but if one may judge from private letters coming from New-York it may reasonably be supposed that the information conveyed to the Ministry possesses very great interest. As might have been foreseen, a portion of the Democrats has cried out more loudly against foreign interference than even the Republicans themselves; it has demanded more vociferously than ever war to the knife for the reëstablishment of the old Union. * * * * A journal of the Republican Party displays astonishing vigor. It talks of nothing less than declaring war upon France and her accomplice, England. In its exaltation, this paper is led away by strange illusions; the formidable quarrel of North and South is nothing but a petty disagreement ready to give place to the most cordial unanimity against the pretensions of the foreigner. The pretext also for replying to a pacific proposition by a declaration of war is easily to be found. Forty-thousand men are to be sent under BANKS to Texas. Then President LINCOLN, employing intervention to counteract intervention, will propose to France mediation between her and Mexico; if France refuses BANKS' troops will join those of JUAREZ. The end of all this is to be the acquisition of all the northern Provinces of Mexico, without purchase, for the benefit of the United States. All this is, after all, nothing but a Yankee fanfaronade, still the language in which it is couched is not to be despised, for it is the system of the dispositions of the actual majority of American Unionists, and displays the inexplicable embarrassments into which we should cast ourselves, if by an adventurous policy we should attempt to impress decisive action upon our scheme of amicable intervention. No doubt the minds of many are by this time calmed, but the effect is already produced, and will only grow in tenacity."

ST. PETERSBURG, Saturday, Dec. 13.

The Journal de St. Petersburg of to-day, in reply to an an article of La France, says:

"We repeat that Russia was the first to take up her ground on the Greek question upon the treaty and protocol of 1830. No candidate for the throne of Greece has been put forward by Russia, even by the slightest hint. When public opinion mentioned certain names in connection with our country, we positively declared, in the name of the Government, that Russia had never favored any candidate. Russia participates in Eastern affairs by reason of her interest in their progress, and from her sympathy for nationalities and co-religionists. Her main desire is the establishment of tranquility, based upon the conciliation of interests, and the passions of political parties. As one of the means of achieving this end, Russia recommends for the present the establishment of the balance of influence of the different European Powers."

VIENNA, Saturday, Dec. 13.

The Upper House adopted the Budget to-day precisely as voted by the Chamber of Deputies.

The Emperor in person will close the session on Thursday next.

—It is authoritatively denied that Mr. Thurlow Weed has disposed of any part of his interest in the Albany Evening Journal to Mr. H. H. Van Dyck.

BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

STATED SESSION—SATURDAY, Dec. 27,

ing on lease of three hundred thousand dollars, being

[illegible] still remaining unpurchased and in the hands of the

It is necessary for the Commissioners of the Park to [illegible] them to contract their expenses with a view [illegible] within the provisions of the Act for [illegible] the payment of accounts is uncertain and irregular.

The demoralizing effect upon persons employed, whether under contract or otherwise, of doubts as to their payment for their labor, is apparent.

Parties having contracts with the Park, who are employing men during the Winter on work essential to finishing in the Spring, structures partially complete, will be compelled to discontinue their work and discharge their men if they cannot get money to pay them.

The obligations of the Commissioners of the Park now outstanding amount to about the sum of $100,000. To meet these, to pay the wages of mechanics and laborers, to make the necessary preparations for prosecuting the work in the Spring, the Board of Commissioners of the Central Park require the issue by your Honorable Body of the remainder of the bonds authorized by the act of the Legislature, and they respectfully request your Honorable Body to pass the following preamble and resolution at the meeting of the Board of Councilmen above alluded to, in order that they may not be compelled to discharge, during the inclement months of Winter, the mechanics and laborers now advantageously employed.

Your Honorable Body is aware that if the resolution above referred to be passed without delay, the time required for advertising the bonds and awarding the bids is such that the money could not be realized much before next Saturday; during which time the persons alluded to are liable to be subjected to great inconvenience for want of money.

It can be gratifying to every citizen of New-York to observe the unanimity of favor that has greeted the results thus far marked out in this popular pleasure ground.

The musical entertainments, without expense to the public, have been very widely appreciated.

Through the Board of Education, opportunities for enjoying a share in the sports on the ice, have been rendered easy to the children of the public schools and other school organizations of the city. The Winter sports are as popular as are those of the Summer. Order and system have prevailed in every department.

A daily account of the visitors to the Park shows, that more than four millions of people have in eleven months of this year found their way through its gates. Its troops of strangers are not confined to this city nor to this continent.

The Commissioners of the Central Park trust that no obstacles will arise in delay the completion of this work, which seems thus far to have won the favorable regards of the entire population of the City, and in the completion and preservation of which every citizen is so deeply interested.

Dated NEW-YORK, Dec. 23, 1862.

Divorce—The Complaint of a Sea Captain's Wife.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Barnard.

Jane E. Merwin vs. Timothy G. Merwin.—The plaintiff brings this action to obtain a divorce a vinculo, on the ground of alleged adultery of defendant, who is a sea captain, well-known in this City. At the commencement of the action, the plaintiff obtained an injunction, restraining defendant from parting with, or in any way interfering with his property; also a writ of ne exeat, (on which he was held to bail in the sum of $15,000.) The plaintiff charges that defendant has removed the greater part of his property beyond the jurisdiction of this Court with a view to prevent her obtaining alimony, and that he has expressed a determination to deprive her of support from him. The plaintiff alleges that defendant possesses considerable property; that in addition to his other means, he is sole owner of the ship Charles D. Merwin, worth $60,000. The defendant is in the debtor's prison in Ludlow-street, not having given bail. His counsel moved, on affidavits, to dissolve the injunction and to discharge the ne exeat. Defendant denies that he is possessed of property of anything like the value claimed by the plaintiff, or that he intended to remove his property out of the jurisdiction of this Court for the purpose of depriving her of support. He charges her with gross extravagance, heartlessness, and details various instances of alleged misconduct. The affidavits of the parties being of a conflicting character, the Court referred the motion to D. F. Ingraham, Jr., Esq.

Clinton and Crane for the motion; Harrington and Grieff, opposed.

MONDAY, Dec. 29—A. M.

The capture of the Ariel, and the consequent alarm about our Specie receipts from California, will be productive of much less inconvenience and mischief than the public may at first blush apprehend. The remittances of Gold from San Francisco direct to England for New-York account are already equal to the sums sent from Aspinwall to this City. The shipments to Panama by the Pacific Mail steamers are divided at that point between the British West India line to Southampton and the Vanderbilt line to New-York. If the whole were sent by the former, and drawn against from New-York, as about one-half is now drawn against, the difference would not be important to our General Specie movement. It would simply save the transhipment of so much Gold from New-York to England. The great house of Messrs. ROTHSCHILD, than whom no Bankers in the world understand so thoroughly the Exchanges in Gold and Silver, have for many years adopted this course. Their correspondent at San Francisco, Mr. DAVIDSON, ships Gold and Silver Bullion by the Pacific Mail for the Isthmus and thence by the West India steamers to London. He draws his Exchange to a corresponding amount on Messrs. AUGUST BELMONT & Co., correspondents of the ROTHSCHILDS in this City, who in turn make their bills on London. The settlement of trade balances between San Francisco and Europe requires very little Specie. Practically, therefore, the shipments referred to are to cover Exchange made on the Atlantic States. Other Bankers, like WELLS, FARGO & Co., who already insure their Gold in London, will doubtless avail of the English flag from the Isthmus, and instead of selling Gold in this market, will be sellers of Bills on London. The difference will be against the Vanderbilt line of steamers on the Atlantic side in the loss of the freight on Gold. The difference to the Pacific Mail Company as Gold carriers will be unimportant. When the Cotton ports are reopened, and turn the Exchanges against England, the Gold must again come to New-York, but that will not be until after the ocean is cleared of such pirates as the Alabama, and our Currency restored to the Specie-paying basis. The shipments of Gold from California are now altogether equal to, if not rather ahead of, the corresponding season last year. The shipments of Silver Bullion very much larger. The latter go, in a considerable measure, to China direct, as the Bullion would finally go to China or British India if first sent to London. The inconvenience from the present disaster may be temporarily embarrassing to the receivers of Gold in this market, but the remedy cannot be delayed very long.

The trade of the past week was moderately active, for the season. The City shopping trade unusually so. The return of the Christmas holidays has seldom brought with it so much liberality, not to say extravagance, in shopping for presents. The Dry Goods people, the Jewellers, Booksellers, Clothiers, &c., all report to this effect. This speaks well for the rewards of labor and business through the expiring year. The import entries of the week are on a fair scale. The Customs, although embraced in five business days, are on the increase, and at this and the other ports have absorbed about $1,000,000 of the old issue of United States Notes. The amount still out will, as estimated some weeks ago, fall to about $10,000,000 by the second week in January. The Money affairs of the week were partially excited by the conflicting rumors of the financial programme in Congress. But on Friday and Saturday the rough outlines of the Bills prepared at the Treasury and drafted by a portion of the Ways and Means Committee who remain in Washington during the Congressional recess, were made public, and as both point to the inevitable issue of United States Notes of Circulation, as part of the scheme for raising $900,000,000 for the service of the next eighteen months, Wall-street became pretty well satisfied that no serious attempt to float any considerable portion of the new Loans, can be made, with the hope of creditable success, or to pay off the present arrearages due to the Army in the field, without this important auxiliary. The Bill said to be prepared for the Ways and Means Committee contemplates a leeway, so to speak, of $200,000,000, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, by providing first $500,000,000 in 6 ₱ cent. Loans; secondly, $300,000,000 in 6 ₱ cent. Treasury paper; and, thirdly, $300,000,000 in United States Notes of lawful tender, the last two being convertible and reconvertible into each other, under regulations of the Department, according to the exigencies of the public service and the condition of the public credit in the Money Market. The plan is not only devised with ability, but with an eye single to making the immense appropriations for the service of the next eighteen months at all times available without delay or embarrassment to the Treasury, and without the undue sacrifice of the public credit. The Bill of the Secretary proposes $900,000,000 in any or all of the forms now authorized by the Acts of the present Congress, including United States Notes for Circulation, but his expressed wish, we believe, is that the Committee of Ways and Means shall apportion the sums to be raised each way, which they will probably do, in something like the above form, and without embracing the further employment of 7:30 ₱ cent. paper convertible into long Stock.

The market for Money became very easy on the Street after Christmas Day, at 6 ₱ cent., at call or on short notice. On Saturday, some large tenders of Money at this rate were declined by the Brokers, except on 30 or 60 days' notice. The distribution of Dividends, about $6,000,000 in Gold for account of the United States, and States of New-York, Illinois and (perhaps) Ohio, and $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 by other States, Railway Corporations, Banks, &c., will probably add to the general ease in the market. The price of Gold Coin, which left off on Saturday week 132⅜, fell back to 132@131⅜, but returned on Saturday to 132⅜, and finally closed 132½ ₱ cent.

Sales on London Point through the week 1.60 ₱ cent.

The Stock speculation before Christmas Day, and also on Friday, was rather adverse to the market, on account of the rumors referred to above from Washington, and a good many short lines were made on the calculation that the Secretary of the Treasury would not embrace in his scheme of finance the alternative of a further issue of United States Notes for Circulation. On Saturday, however, the market turned upward again, and a very large speculative business was done at both the Old and Public Boards. The excitement at the 1 o'clock session of the Public Board was unusually marked, the sales of the Railway Stocks amounting to 18,250 Shares. The business at the afternoon session of the Old Board was also very active, at a corresponding advance, and to this was added 7,000 or 8,000 Shares at the closing session at 4 o'clock of the Public Board. The Government Securities did not participate in the general buoyancy, being adversely influenced by rumors of the immediate pressing wants of the Treasury. The market otherwise closed strong.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The mystery of the Banks' expedition is now entirely cleared up. By the arrival at this port yesterday of the steamships Roanoke and Potomac, the first from New-Orleans on the 18th and the second on the 19th inst., we learn of its arrival at that city, where Gen. Banks has established his headquarters as Commander of the Department of the Gulf—Gen. Butler being superseded by him. Our special correspondence this morning gives full details of all that has transpired, from the time Gen. Banks left New-York on board the North Star, to the date of the sailing of the Potomac, including the General Order of farewell issued by Gen. Butler to his soldiers, and the proclamation of Gen. Banks on assuming command. The first duty assigned to Gen. Banks is the opening of the Mississippi, in conjunction with the expedition going down the river from Cairo, and already a portion of his forces had gone to Baton Rouge and taken possession of that city, and preparations were being made for an attack on the rebel fortifications at Port Hudson, fifteen miles above—unless, indeed, the rebels had already evacuated that point, which was rumored in New-Orleans when the Potomac left. A report was also in circulation that Vicksburgh had been evacuated; but this is probably an error, as we should ere this have heard of such an occurrence by way of Memphis and Cairo. The change in Commanders in the Department—which, by the way, now includes Texas—of course created considerable excitement in New-Orleans. Gen. Butler had appointed a day for the reception of his friends, and was expected to leave for New-York on Tuesday, the 23d inst., on board the North Star.

The Vanderbilt steamship Ariel, which arrived at this port from Aspinwall on Saturday night, on her outward trip, was captured by the pirate Alabama on the 7th inst., near the east end of Cuba. She was detained until the 10th inst., and then allowed to proceed on her voyage, after giving a ransom bond in the sum of $228,000. She had on board a quantity of arms and ammunition, which was taken out by the Alabama, and a detachment of one hundred and twenty marines who were paroled. Among other plunder taken was $8,000 in "greenbacks" belonging to Wells, Fargo & Co. The pirate seems to have overtaken the Ariel with the greatest ease.

The rebel schooner Relief, 67 tons, 5 days from Mobile, arrived at Havana on the 21st inst., with cotton. She reports that the steamer Florida (alias Oreto) had got out of Mobile with 100 men on board, having passed the blockade during the night.

Twenty-five hundred rebel cavalry, with six pieces of artillery, under command of Fitzhugh Lee, attacked our forces at Dumfries, on Saturday afternoon, and after a brisk fight of some three hours were repulsed, and retreated toward Warrenton, our cavalry in pursuit. Our loss was slight. It is believed that the rebels subsequently encountered a portion of Gen. Slocum's command, at Wolf River, as cannonading was heard in that direction. We also have a rumor that the rebels yesterday surprised a party of our cavalry at Occoquan, this side of Dumfries, and captured several supply wagons.

Dr. John Swinburne, of Albany, in a private letter written from Washington, states that the army is about to make an important movement—the character of which, however, he is not at liberty to mention. Dr. Swinburne, it will be recollected, left home, immediately after the battle of Fredericksburgh, for the scene of that disastrous conflict, to render gratuitous service to the wounded.

Jeff. Davis has issued a proclamation which exceeds in mendacity and savageness all which have preceded it. It is directed against Gen. Butler and his officers; against all officers found in arms with slaves, and against all slaves found "in insurrection." He starts off with a preamble with an infinite number of whereases—in the very first one of which he tells an untruth, in stating that Mumford was hung by Gen. Butler for pulling down an American flag in New Orleans before the city was occupied by the United States forces—and ends with ordering—first, that Butler and all his commissioned officers are to be hung when caught; second, that the privates under his command, not being free agents, will be paroled according to the usages of war; third, that all slaves captured in arms shall be delivered to the authorities of the respective States to which they belong, to be dealt with according to law; and fourth, that a like course shall be taken with all commissioned officers found serving with slaves.

Another demonstration on the Louisville and Nashville railroad has been made by the guerilla John Morgan. He entered Glasgow on Wednesday with a force of three thousand cavalry. He was opposed by three companies of the Second Michigan cavalry, but the latter finally fell back to Munfordsville. On Thursday the rebels, who had advanced to Bear Wallow, near Cane City, were attacked by a force of our troops and driven off, after damging the railroad to some extent at Glasgow Junction. Several rebels were captured during the skirmish.

General Rosecrans has issued an order for the stoppage of all boats now in the vicinity of the falls at Louisville, and their detention until further orders.

The rebel General Jeff. Thompson is back again to his old "stamping ground." He is reported to be at Pocahontas, Ark., with between five and six thousand infantry, mostly Missouri and Arkansas troops, besides two regiments of cavalry and one battery. Pocahontas is near the Missouri State line, below Pilot Knob.

Thirty-seven rebel prisoners arrived in Whaling on Wednesday last. The Intelligencer gives the following particulars of their capture:—"About the first of the present month Gen. Crook, commanding at Brownstown, in West Virginia, dispatched Major Ernst Schache, of the Twenty-eighth Ohio regiment, on a scouting party. They marched one hundred and sixty miles, and fell in with the traitor Floyd, whom they drove across the Big Sandy river into Kentucky. They also burned the town of Logan, along with the residence and other buildings of the late Secretary; broke up a gang of bushwackers, and finally returned with thirty-seven prisoners and about a hundred cattle. The prisoners were in charge of Capt. Kennedy, Assistant Adjutant-General to Gen. Crook, who turned them over to the Provost-Marshal at the Atheneum. Capt. Kennedy also brought with him three or four deserters from different regiments."

Five thousand Germans have notified Hon. Eli Thayer that they are willing to settle in Florida upon the terms of his plan of restoring that State to the National Government. One thousand of these Germans now reside in St. Louis, Mo.

There will be a large amount—over seventy millions—due the army in the course of a week, and there are rumors that Mr. Chase will endeavor to secure the sum by means of a loan.

GENERAL NEWS.

By the steamship Roanoke, which touched at Havana on her trip from New-Orleans, we receive an important document bearing on the present condition of affairs in Mexico, which we translate. It is the manifesto of the Representatives of the States of Mexico in Congress assembled against the French invasion, and an appeal to the Mexican nation to resist it to the last extremity.

The Roanoke also brings us our Havana Correspondence to the 20th inst. In it we have a curious story of the manner in which the pirate Alabama escaped from the San Jacinto at Martinique, which is probably more fanciful than true. The new Captain-General of Cuba, Dulce, seems inclined to commence an earnest crusade against the Slave-trade, which has been carried on to an enormous extent during the administration of his predecessor. Nine steamers, it is understood, are to be sent from Spain, especially to look after the traffickers in human flesh. Other important reforms are also about to be inaugurated on the island.

The mails by the Europa arrived in this City yesterday. We give elsewhere in the Times such extracts from our Foreign files brought by her as are of sufficient interest. The steamship Glasgow, from Liverpool on the 10th, and Queenstown on the 11th inst., arrived at this port yesterday. Her news is not so late as the Europa's.

Dates from Venezuela are to the 22d ult. The insurgents of Maracaibo have manifested their desire for reconciliation with the Government. The Archbishop of Caracas has gone on the mission of receiving their submission, and of pardoning in the name of the Government past offences. Two schooners-of-war have sailed from Puerto Cabello to add to those blockading Maracaibo, and more are being fitted out in that place with the same object. The Government has been victorious in skirmishes at Victoria, Maracai, Cagna, and several other places. Gen. Falcon is about to be "bagged," as he is between the forces of Gens. Camero and Rubin.

The Board of Aldermen met at 1 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. A preamble and resolutions by Mr. Farley, relative to the death of Maj. William Horgan, of Meagher's Irish Brigade, who was killed at Fredericksburgh, were adopted. They offer the condolence of the Common Council with the family of the deceased on his loss, and direct the Committee on National Affairs to receive his remains, and take charge of the funeral. [The funeral took place at 2 o'clock P. M. yesterday, from the City Hall.] A communication was received from the Central Park Commission, urging the necessity of a further appropriation, to enable them to proceed economically with their work. They state that the improvements above One Hundred and Second-street cannot be proceeded with advantageously until the question is settled whether the land lying between One Hundred and Sixth and One Hundred and Tenth streets is to be added to the Park. Their liabilities amount to $175,000; and no more money will be wanted to complete the Park than has been authorized for the purpose by the Legislature, of which $833,000 remains to be raised. So far the expenditures amount to $3,595,330 75. Add to this sum the cost of the land, $3,788,751 37, and the total outlay for the Park has been $7,384,082 12. Messrs. Fromment and Farley endeavored, but without success, to have the paper published. It was referred to the Finance Committee, who have before them other matters in regard to the Park. The Mayor's veto of the resolution to increase the salary of the President of the Croton Board to $5,000 per annum, and to increase the salaries of some of the subordinates in the same Department, was overruled by 14 to 1. The Board adjourned till 4 o'clock Monday.

Coroner Ranney held an inquest yesterday, at the Twenty-seventh Precinct Station-house, upon the body of a woman named Margaret McLaughlin, aged 45 years, who came to her death at the hands of her brother, Austin Heeny. The testimony shows that the woman was most brutally murdered by being beaten, cut, thrown down stairs, and then stamped upon by her brother. The jury rendered a verdict to that effect, and the Coroner committed the offender to the Tombs to await the action of the Grand Jury.

It is stated that by constructing a canal about three-fourths of a mile in length, from Big Stone Lake to Lake Traver, steamboats from St. Paul could navigate both the Minnesota River and the Red River of the North to Lake Winnipeg, adistance of 700 miles! The country traversed by these rivers is surpassingly fertile, and capable of sustaining a dense population. Lake Winnipeg is larger than Lake Ontario, and receives the Sas-katch-a-wan River from the West. The Sas-katch-a-wan River is navigable to a point (Edmonton House) near the Rocky Mountains, 700 miles west of Lake Winnipeg, and only 150 miles east of the celebrated gold diggings on Frazer River, in British Columbia. The digging of that one mile of canal, would, therefore, enable a steamboat at New-Orleans to pass into Lake Winnipeg, and from thence to Edmonton House, some 5,000 miles! A bill has been introduced into the Senate, which makes provision for the building of the canal.

The Manchester, (Vt.) Journal says that large quantities of cotton taken from mattresses, are being shipped from Vermont to Massachusetts.

The corporation of Troy is about to issue shinplasters of the denomination of five cents. The city gains $20 interest per day on the $85,000 of this currency now in circulation.

Acting Gov. W. F. N. Arny of New Mexico, delivered his message to the territorial legislature on Dec. 2. Among other things he recommends the establishment of a daily mail between Fort Leavenworth and Santa Fé, viâ Topeka and Fort Larned.

The iron-clad battery Patapsco, one of the Monitor fleet, arrived at Philadelphia from Wilmington (Del.) on Friday, having steamed the distance, which is between twenty-eight and thirty miles, in two hours and three quarters. Most of the time she had the tide with her.

The Stock market was active and higher on Saturday, the speculation in the Railway Shares being unusually spirited. Gold, 132¼. Exchange, 145½@146 ₱ cent.

Business was quite moderate in Flour and Wheat, on Saturday, and active in Corn, the latter closing at slightly advanced prices. A good inquiry prevailed for Cotton, Hay and Hops at buoyant rates. Provisions were in less demand; Mess Pork was a shade dearer. Groceries were quiet. No important changes occurred in other branches of trade. Government contracts for Pork, Rice, and Coffee were awarded. The total number of vessels of all classes in port was 515.

The Newspaper Press and the War.—Mr. Weed, the editor of the Albany Evening Journal, writing from Washington, says:

"I believed then, and I do most strongly now, that this rebellion would have been subdued ere this, if, at the outbreak, the Government had suppressed every daily newspaper which contained a line or a word upon the war question, except to give the results of engagements. Our daily journals have kept the Confederates minutely and seasonably informed. The greater the vigilance and accuracy of these journals, the greater their value to the enemy."

If this belief is well founded it is deeply to be regretted that this policy was not pursued. The sacrifice of every newspaper in the country would have been, and would still be a small price to pay for the suppression of the rebellion.

But the course recommended by Mr. Weed was wholly unnecessary. The same end could have been attained by other means. If the Government had by some authentic act directed, or even requested the newspaper Press not to publish any information whatever on the war, except to give results, its wishes would have been rigidly respected; and if they had not, the Government would then have had good ground for enforcing them. It preferred to establish a censorship, and thus to assume the responsibility of editing the war news in the daily newspapers. Of course, the Editors proper felt relieved from responsibility and published whatever the Government censor allowed to come. But this attempt on the part of the Government was partial, fitful, and therefore fruitless. The Washington journals were exempted from all restriction; the supervision was confined to the telegraph; no discrimination or steady appreciation was shown in the exercise of the power assumed, and as a necessary consequence the attempt broke down.

If the Government really suffers injury from the publication of war news by the Press, and will make a judicious effort to check the evil, it will have no difficulty in doing so. Whether the people would consent that "not a line or a word upon the war question" should be uttered by the Press, may be a little doubtful.

The Banks Expedition.

The fog which hung so long and so heavily over the Banks Expedition lifts this morning. Our copious correspondence announces its progress and arrival at New-Orleans, and the departure of a detachment from it up the Mississippi River. Its principal mission is to cooperate with the descending expedition in opening that river to free and unobstructed navigation, and in holding it permanently for the Government of the United States.

No event has happened for many months which smote the public heart with so sore a sense of disappointment, as the failure of Gen. Banks to cooperate, by going up the James River, with Gen. Burnside in his advance upon Richmond. It seemed to everybody so evidently the thing to be done—it seemed so clear that if it had been done Banks would have so divided the rebel force in front of Fredericksburgh as to give Burnside a brilliant and decisive victory, that the great mass of the people have not yet forgiven the Administration for what they regard as the crowning fatal blunder of the whole campaign. Natural and almost universal as it is, it does not seem to us wholly reasonable. Whether Banks, by advancing upon Richmond from the South, could have produced the results so eagerly hoped for and so confidently predicted, is at least open to doubt. But it should be remembered that the expedition was planned and set on foot long before Burnside took command of the Army of the Potomac, and of course, long before the plan of advancing on Richmond by way of Fredericksburgh had been formed. It grew out of other necessities, and was designed to meet other emergencies of the public service than those in which the fate of Richmond was directly involved.

It will be remembered that Gen. Butler, by the very vigor and energy of his administration, had involved the Government in some very embarrassing complications with Foreign Powers, and especially with France. In September these had reached such a point as to lead to the appearance of a French squadron in the immediate vicinity of New-Orleans,—an act not intended probably as a menace, but still sufficiently unusual to disturb the sensibilities of our Government and people. While the President, therefore, had no thought or purpose of censuring the actions of Gen. Butler, it may very naturally have been felt that the differences to which that action had given rise, could more easily be adjusted under the auspices of another commander. The military policy for the Gulf Department, moreover, was probably about to undergo some changes, and to embrace features which required the presence of a commander less committed by his acts and opinions than Gen. Butler had necessarily become. Within the next sixty days, the Department of the Gulf will unquestionably become the scene of the most important movements of the war; and it demands, more than any other, the presence of an officer who adds great political sagacity and firmness to military skill, and whose character and conduct command the confidence of the whole country. All will concede that to no man could this responsible and delicate task be more safely and fitly assigned than to Gen. Banks.

Gen. Butler is not removed from his command; he is simply outranked by Gen. Banks. No censure is expressed or implied upon his official conduct by the proceeding. It gives no just ground for the imputations in which some of the opposition journals have seen fit to indulge, nor can Jefferson Davis regard it as having been in the slightest degree brought about by his denunciations and threats. The Government finds it necessary to adopt a policy, both in military affairs and in its negotiations with foreign States, which will be aided by the substitution of another commander. And Gen. Butler, as will be seen by his order on taking leave of his troops, accepts the action of the Government as in no sense hostile or disparaging to him.

After having formed its plans and orgaized the Bank's Expedition for the purpose of carrying them out as long ago as in September, the Government could scarcely have laid then aside and made them subordinate to the December movement of Gen. Burnside, upon the rebel capital; and much as we must deplore the failure of Gen. Burnside's attempted advance,—a failure which would probably not have been averted if Gen. Banks had gone up the James River, the country may yet see reason for regarding the movement of the latter as the most important of the two, and for rejoicing that he was not diverted from its prosecution.

The Capture of the Ariel.

One of the most astounding miracles of modern science occurred on Saturday last, when the City of New-York obtained from the City of San Francisco, the first intelligence of a startling event, occurring in our immedfate vicinity and affecting largely our property and citizens. The steamship Ariel, belonging to Commodore Vanderbilt, which left New-York on the 1st inst., was captured, off the east coast of Florida, on the 7th inst., by the Confederate privateer, the Alabama, detained till the 10th, and then on a ransom bond for $228,000 being given, "payable thirty days after the recognition of the Southern Confederacy," was permitted to continue her voyage to Aspinwall, which place was reached on the 12th inst. From Aspinwall the news was borne across the Isthmus to Panama; and from Panama, conveyed north along the Pacific coast several thousand miles to San Francisco; and from San Francisco it is sent back toward the East, four thousand miles overland, to New-York City. Thus the Pacific Ocean becomes the reporter of deeds done in the Atlantic waters, and in the track of one of its most frequented routes of travel.

The delay in the arrival of the Ariel had already begun to excite uneasiness in the minds of her owners and the shippers of treasure; and the dispatch from San Francisco, detailing her encounter with the pirate, had prepared them to mourn her as "down among the dead men" of the fathomless ocean. But happily the Ariel, in proper person, steamed into port before the evening was past, and cut short the several obituaries that were in preparation for the occasion.

It is not worth while to recapitulate here any part of the account so fully given elsewhere in the Times of this new outrage of the rebel privateer upon American commerce. This form of annoyance has become somewhat chronic. The public Press has uttered, as frequently as it need, the popular vexation that such a state of things should exist. The Navy Department has been chided, entreated and exhorted to take adequate steps to redeem the Nation from the humiliation, not to speak of the losses, that a contemptible foe has been inflicting on it, for a year and a half, on the high seas. Every fresh outrage, whether by the Sumter, the Nashville or the Alabama, has been followed by a spasmodic movement of our men-of-war in pursuit. But with all our boasted maritime strength, and under all the aggravation the continued and impudent robbing and burning of our helpless ships at sea could inspire, our navy has failed to appease the public impatience by a single capture of a privateer. Nor does it appear that the Department is any better prepared to-day than it was a year ago to meet this particular mode of rebel warfare—save in the possession of one vessel of speed—the Vanderbilt—which was a gift to the Government from the owner of the Ariel, and not the result of any wise prevision of the Navy Department to meet such contingencies as threaten our commerce.

The semi-weekly receipts of gold at the port of New-York from mines of California, perform a very important part in sustaining public confidence and supporting the credit of the Government. Each steamer from Aspinwall has been bringing us about $1,000,000. And the loss of a single shipment by rebel capture, followed, as it would be, by disturbances and uncertainties in the regular flow of the precious metal in its accustomed channels in future, would involve disasters, not only to the people, but to the Government credit, outweighing all probable cost of measures necessary to avert such a catastrophe.

In the present case of the Ariel, it seems we are indebted to two causes for having escaped with comparative impunity from the clutches of the notable Semmes. One is good luck, the other is the distinguished clemency of the Confederate corsair! By good luck, the Alabama overhauled the Ariel on her voyage to Aspinwall, and not on her return, treasure-laden, to New-York. And the purpose of Semmes to burn the Ariel,—his usual practice when he takes valuable American ships,—was turned aside by the appeal of Capt. Jones in behalf of the passengers of the Ariel, who by the destruction of the ship would be subjected to much hardship from an enforced delay on the Island of Jamaica, where Semmes proposed to land them.

Upon the whole, seeing that we can make nothing by fretfulness or anger over the renewed exhibition of our national impotence at sea, it is best to endure it patiently if possible. It rests with the Navy Department to determine how long we are to be subjected to such a humiliating position. Each day's continuance of what is a mortification and disgrace adds to the heavy burden of discontent and grief that the people are very tired of bearing.

For the individuals themselves whose fate it is to fall into the hands of Semmes, we do not see that we can properly express any sympathy. He seems to treat all such persons with most distinguished consideration. His dress is faultless if not fastidious—his manners mild and "beautiful"—his generosity of the "gushing" type—he can hardly restrain the grief he feels at being driven by the oppressions of his beloved South to the rude practices of privateering. The passengers of the Ariel who reached California (we are told by the San Francisco dispatch,) were profuse in their praises of the gallant Semmes, and Capt. Jones himself, who spent considerable time metaphorically "in bonds" on the Alabama, bears willing testimony to the cleanliness of the ship, the discipline of the crew, and the general courtesy and good conduct of all on board of her. If we are obliged to have "pirates" afloat, we should thank the Navy Department for such as Semmes.

The Black Flag.

The legislation of all the Slave States, even in time of peace has, so far as related to slave property, been of a very desperate character. In it all the ordinary restrictions imposed by humanity, civilized usage and sound principles of criminal jurisprudence, have been entirely disregarded. The one great object of the slave code has been to strike the greatest possible amount of terror into slaves and "Abolitionists;" and for this purpose cruel and unusual punishments have always had a preference. Cases occurred too, every year, in almost every county, in which the law, sanguinary and ferocious as it was, was found too slow or too mild to satisfy public feeling, and the mob was left to work its own wild will by burnings alive and torturings of greater or less atrocity. If we had chosen to conduct the war with religious respect for Slavery, and had cautiously forborne to meddle with it, this savage policy might, perchance, never have been put into force against us. Not that the Southern mob would not have devised it, for the propriety of hoisting the black flag has been a subject of discussion and commendation in the Southern papers ever since the battle of Bull Run; but the leaders were too wary to resort to it, as long as our intentions touching the "institution" were harmless. It was their last bolt, and to hurl it before we came to close quarters would have been the height of imprudence.

But now that the National Government has announced its intention not only not to leave Slavery untouched but to use it as a weapon of warfare, the black flag is flaunted in our faces by Jefferson Davis himself. In other words, he declares his intention to introduce into the conduct of the war, for the protection of Slavery, the same desperate and unscrupulous practices by which it has been the fashion of slaveowners to defend it in time of peace. The period chosen for the issue of the Proclamation renders it all but certain, however, that its first object is to shake the nerves of the North with regard to the policy about to be inaugurated by Mr. Lincoln, on the 1st of January. Whether it will succeed in this, time only can tell; but it serves the purpose, for the present, of completely disposing of the "brutum fulmen" objection to the emancipation decree, of which we hear so much at the North. The hilarity with which the alleged futility of the measure has inspired so many semi-secesh writers and orators here, is evidently not shared by Mr. Davis. However amusing it may seem to them, their great hero at the South has, in the most solemn manner, under his hand and seal, declared that he at least "does not see the force of it." More effective testimony to its value as a purely military weapon we could not possibly have.

As to the duty of our Government at this crisis, there are certain points on which it is clear, however doubtful it may be on others. As regards Gen. Butler and his officers, it has, by retaining him in office at New-Orleans formally though tacitly approved of each of his acts, and of such portions of his policy, as have come to its knowledge. With all those of Davis' charges against him which are true, or have a foundation of truth, there can be no doubt that it had been made fully acquainted. It is consequently bound by every conceivable consideration to stand by him to the last extremity. If he, or any officer serving under his command, be captured and hanged, honor and policy alike require that a full measure of retaliation should be meted out. If he has been guilty of crimes in our service, it is as incumbent on our Government to punish him for them; but to allow the rebels to take that task out of its hands, would be in the highest degree humiliating to us as a nation, and in the highest degree demoralizing for our army.

As to the employment of slaves as soldiers, or the use of them in any way in aid of military operations against the rebels as Davis employs them himself all over the South, and as there were actually three thousand armed negroes with his army during the campaign in Maryland, his objection to our using them, based on the "dictates of reason and the instincts of humanity," is so absurd that we feel satisfied he intends it for European circulation. If the arming of blacks against whites in warfare be an atrocious thing, we are at the North fairly entitled to the benefit of the rule, and we think a legitimate deduction from it would be the impropriety of using them to support and clothe white men who are engaged in killing us. Whether blacks slay us with muskets, or raise corn to feed their masters while they are doing it, or build intrenchments for them to stand behind while they are shooting at us, makes no difference in the mind of any reasonable man.

But if the Confederates begin to massacre all negroes in our service, or white officers in charge of them, we take it to be clear that it is our duty not to retaliate. The only thing to be said about it is that it will render the service in which we are engaged more desperate. To imitate the barbarities of desperate and enraged barbarians is a thing which religion, humanity, and the usage of civilized nations and our own self-respect alike forbid. When a Christian nation is engaged in war with Turks or Montenegrins, it does not cut off the heads of wounded captives because this is the custom of their enemies. We do not scalp or torture Indian prisoners, because Indians scalp and torture ours. If there be any truth in the boasts we have so often made of the superiority of our civilization over that of the South, it ought to show itself in a crisis of this sort. And we shall have the consolation of knowing that their indulgence in any atrocities which either their experience or imagination may suggest to them, will not advance their object by one iota. No war was ever in the least affected by hanging or cutting throats in cold blood. Our reliance, if we mean to come through this struggle victorious, must be on discipline, skill and courage. We may leave to them the butchery of prisoners, with the fullest assurance that it will not affect the final result in the smallest degree.

The Case of Mumford—The Occupation of New-Orleans.

The main point made by Jeff. Davis, in his proclamation pronouncing Gen. Butler "a felon," who, when caught, shall be "immediately executed by hanging," is that "Wm. B. Mumford, a citizen of the Confederate States, had been executed by the United States authorities at New-Orleans, for having pulled down the United States flag in that city, before its occupation by the United States forces." After thus explicitly stating his case, he mentions the correspondence of the Confederate authorities with Gen. Halleck on the subject, and again asserts that he "has received evidence fully establishing the truth of the fact that the said William B. Mumford, a citizen of the Confederacy, was actually and publicly executed in cold blood by hanging, after the occupation of the City of New-Orleans by the forces under Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, when said Mumford was an unresisting and non-combatant captive, and for no offence even alleged to have been committed by him, subsequent to the date of the capture of said city."

Notwithstanding these reiterated assertions of the rebel President, however, the documentary evidence seems to be rather against the accuracy of his statement.

The first question that arises is, What constitutes military occupation? On this point the authorities on military law are positive and explicit. "Until the ownership of property acquired by conquest is confirmed or made complete," says Halleck (Laws of War, p. 776,) "it is held by the right of military occupation, which, by the usage of nations and the laws of war, differs from and falls far short of the right of complete conquest. It must not be inferred that the conqueror can have no control or government of hostile territory unless he actually occupies it with an armed force. It is deemed sufficient that it submits to him and recognizes his authority as a conqueror." "The rule is," says Wildman, "that the whole is possessed by the occupation of a part, if an intention to appropriate the whole accompany such occupation, and all others be excluded from occupying the residue. Two persons cannot have several possessions of the same thing at the same time; such possession of one excludes the possession of another." The meaning of Paulus is probably the same, when he says that possession of part, with an appropriating mind, is possession of the whole up to its boundary; and by boundary he signifies the commencement of another's possession or occupation. With regard to the government of cities or territories occupied, it is laid down that "the right of one belligerent to occupy and govern the territory of the enemy while in its military possession, is one of the incidents of war, and flows directly from the right to conquer." "If a fort, town, city, harbor, island, or province, is forced to submit to the arms of a conqueror, such place or territory instantly becomes a conquest, and is subject to the laws which the conqueror may impose on it."

The next point is, when or at what date was the military occupation of the City of New-Orleans effected by the forces of the United States? It was on the 27th of April, it must be remembered, that Mumford tore down the flag which had been raised by our forces on the Mint. Were these forces at that time, according to military terms, in occupation of the city? It was on the 24th—three days before Mumford's act—that Admiral Farragut, according to his official report to Secretary Welles, appeared with his fleet in front of New-Orleans, and on the same day he demanded the surrender of the city, and also sent a letter to the Mayor, in which he said: "Your Honor will please give directions that no flag but that of the United States will be permitted to fly in the presence of this fleet, so long as it has the power to prevent it." "Gen. Lovell," said Mayor Monroe, in a message to the Common Council, dated the 25th, "refused to surrender the city, but accompanied his refusal with the statement that he should evacuate the city, withdraw his troops, and then leave the city authorities to act as they might deem proper." The Mayor then suggested, and the suggestion was approved by the City Council, that in reply to the demand of Commodore Farragut, "it would be proper to say that we are now (25th) without military protection—that the (Confederate) troops have withdrawn from the city; that we are consequently incapable of making any resistance; and that, therefore, we can offer no obstruction to the occupation of the place by the enemy." On the same day, (the 25th,) or in the words of Farragut: "This morning, at 6 A. M., I sent Capt. Morris, whose ship commanded the Mint, to take possession of it and hoist the American flag thereon, which was done, and the people cheered it."

Thus it was some time after these official and formal acts of occupation that Wm. B. Mumford, at the head of a mob, ascended to the top of the Mint, and tore down the American flag which had been thus solemnly raised by our victorious forces as the symbol of our conquest and power.

Of each of these facts there is abundant proof, both from the official reports of rebel functionaries, and those of our own officers, as well as from the rebel newspapers and our own correspondents. It is true that the act of Mumford was done three days before Gen. Butler, with his military contingent, entered New-Orleans, but as it had been occupied by a force from Farragut's fleet, and as the city and the very building on which the flag was raised, was at the mercy of our guns, that fact did not render the occupation a whit less legal or absolute.

It is evident, therefore, that Jeff. Davis' plea is as false in statement as it is ferocious in its spirit of revenge.

We must say that we think Gen. Halleck has made a very serious and grievous mistake in not communicating the facts in this case, and the justification of the acts of the military authorities at New-Orleans, to Gen. LEE and the world, after he had opened up correspondence with the Confederate authorities on the subject. LEE, according to JEFF. DAVIS, addressed HALLECK concerning the case on the 6th of last July, and again on the 2d of August, to which latter HALLECK replied on Aug. 7, stating that he had no authentic information in the matter, but that he would immediately take measures to ascertain the facts, and inform Gen. LEE thereof. Subsequent efforts were made by authorized Confederate agents, but no reply has to this day been furnished, and JEFF. DAVIS says that our Government thus tacitly admits the facts as he states them. HALLECK should either never have noticed the case at all, or should have cleared it up—not for the satisfaction of JEFF. DAVIS, but for the honor of our Government, and the credit of our military rule. As it is, this rebel charge against us of atrocious, barbarous and illegal conduct has gone out to the entire world, not only not rebutted, but virtually admitted by our Government.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

The Mexican Protest Against Supplying the French in Mexico.

The Government Finances and the Committee of Ways and Means.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Dec. 28.

THE MEXICAN PROTEST.

Since the protest of the Mexican Minister in regard to agents of the French Government being permitted to purchase and ship supplies for the French army in Mexico, Secretary SEWARD has concluded to refer to the Secretaries of War and the Treasury the question as to what articles are contraband of war, with a view of permitting both nations equal privileges outside this list. By this action it is intended to place both French and Mexicans on the same footing.

THE GOVERNMENT FINANCES.

Messrs. Stevens, Spaulding, Hooper, Merrill and Maynard, composing the majority of the Committee of Ways and Means, are in the city, and propose to-morrow to enter formally upon the business of considering the various plans proposed for supplying the Government with money for the present and ensuing fiscal years. The bill published by one of your cotemporaries on Saturday is erroneously designated as a Committee bill. This error tends to mislead the public, as the Committee as yet has no bill, having waited for action on the part of Secretary CHASE. Neither is that portion of Mr. CHASE'S bill printed in the same paper in the shape in which he invites action on the part of the Committee. As he explained in his letter, and as stated in our Friday's dispatch, he will himself materially modify the first section in such a way as to limit the amount of the various issues proposed, unless the Committee, by immediate action in the same direction, shall relieve him from this labor of detail. The views of Secretary CHASE have undergone no modification in regard to the currency. He admits the possible necessity of issuing two or three hundred millions more of demand treasury notes, not so much to give Government money directly, as to supply the country with sufficient currency for its business wants, and thus enable it to lend the Government when the latter desires to borrow. The Secretary is inflexibly opposed to an inflation of the currency, as inevitably tending to bankruptcy and repudiation. He also desires the repeal of the convertibility clause, which in his opinion stands directly in the way of any considerable loans being made, and but for that, he is satisfied that the army arrearages might all be paid off at once. The Committee of Ways and Means propose immediately to accomplish this last desirable result by special legislation. The popular impression that the cause of the Government not having sufficient money to pay off the soldiers, is a mechanical difficulty in the way of the notes being printed with sufficient rapidity, is an error, as no such difficulty exists, the real cause being of a financial nature.

GEN. BUTLER.

Gen. BUTLER, to whom there exists a popular disposition to transfer the soubriquet of "Old Brains," has been ordered to report here, and is probably now on the way.

As the friends of JEFF. DAVIS may imagine that the proceedings of the rebel authorities, to which he alludes in his last proclamation, may have had some influence in the supersedure of Gen. BUTLER in the command of the Department of the Gulf, we will state that Gen. BANKS' expedition will have his cordial approval, and that his own share in the general operations of which it forms a part is to be such as is entirely satisfactory to himself. It is calculated to exalt the good sense of the President in the popular estimation, that he speaks of Gen. BUTLER in terms of the highest praise. It seems quite evident that DAVIS' proclamation is, after all, not so much aimed at Gen. BUTLER, as it is a counterblast against that of President LINCOLN, now soon expected, and which is more dreaded by the rebels than a whole army of Butlers.

FRENCH SUBJECTS IN LOUISIANA.

In reply to the formal complaints which we noticed some time ago, made to our Government by the French Minister, in regard to the treatment to which French subjects in Louisiana have been subjected, it is understood that the Secretary of State has given assurances that everything shall be arranged satisfactorily to the Imperial Government.

THE PORTER COURT-MARTIAL.

In the case of Gen. FITZ-JOHN PORTER, Gen. BURNS is expected to testify to-morrow for the defence, and Gen. MCCLELLAN will be kept back till the last, in order to act as a reserve, and finish the contest with an overwhelming charge.

TESTIMONIAL.

A large number of officials in the Interior Department, last evening, presented to Secretary SMITH, as a parting token of respect on his retiring from the office, a magnificent silver service; and the employes on the Capitol extension presented to Mrs. SMITH a very fine gold watch, chain and diamonds. An appropriate presentation speech to the Secretary was made by HENRY E. MYERS, Esq., of the Pension Office, and responded to by Mr. SMITH in his usual felicitous style.

DR. VINTON.

Rev. Dr. VINTON, of New-York, preached an eloquent discourse to-day in the church of Rev. Dr. PYNE.

TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Dec. 28.

GEN. BUTLER.

Maj.-Gen. BUTLER is by this time on his way to Washington, he having been ordered to report here. Report already assigns him an important command in the field.

MAJ. SPRAGUE.

Maj. SPRAGUE has been allowed leave of absence till further orders. This is to enable him to accept the position of Adjutant-General of the State of New-York, under Gov. SEYMOUR'S administration.

THE PUBLIC PRINTING.

The report of JOHN D. DEFREES, Superintendent of Public Printing, giving in detail the transactions of his office for the year ending 30th of September, has just been printed. The increased demand for printing blanks, occasioned by the war, &c., has been very great. The report shows a saving to the Government of $265,506 since the establishment of the office in March of last year.

Execution of Indians in Minnesota.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Saturday, Dec. 27.

Thirty-eight condemned Indians were hung at Mankato, at 10 o'clock A. M. yesterday. The gallows was so constructed that all fell at once. Several thousand spectators were in attendance. All passed off quietly.

AMUSEMENTS.

The holiday entertainments at the various places of amusement have been attended with the usual festive gatherings during the latter part of last week. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday preceding Christmas were, of course, less acceptable in their results to the treasuries, being affected by the dullness which usually precedes the holiday times. The young folk, however, are in such force now that there is no fear of a relapse, and, in truth, the bills are attractive enough for them and for children of a larger growth. At the principal show-piece establishments there will be no change. Thus, at the Winter Garden the "Lakes of Killarney;" at Niblo's Garden, "Faust and Marguerite;" at Laura Keen's, "Blondette;" at the Old Bowery, "Little Red Riding Hood" and the "Schoolmaster;" (FOX is excellent in both;) and at Barnum's Museum, the "Colleen Bawn;" are still the all-sufficient attractions. A more intellectual feast than can be found at these establishments is provided by Mr. WALLACK, whose bulletin for the week is as follows: To-night, the "Invisible Husband;" to-morrow night, the "School for Scandal;" on Wednesday, the "Clandestine Marriage;" on Thursday, the "Invisible Husband;" on Friday, "Love and Money," and on Saturday, (for the last time,) "A Bachelor of Arts." A word is due also to Mr. JUIGNET, of the French theatre, who strives, and with good effect, to produce for the public the originals of many popular plays, as "Don Cæsar de Bazan" and "Camille," the last of which will be brought out to-morrow-night. Mlle. MARGUERITE DE BOUHELIER appears as the heroine, and MONS. ERNEST GRAVIER as Armand. In the way of music we have to-night at the German Opera AUBER'S opera of the "Maçon," and next week, the Italian Opera, under the steady direction of Mr. GRAU, will commence operations with the charming American prima donna, Miss KELLOG, in the opera of "Il Poliuto."

For the many miscellaneous places of amusement that may be found on Broadway and elsewhere, we must, lacking space for specification, refer to our advertising columns. A glance at the many announcements there will convince the pleasure-seeker that he is amply provided for.

GRAND PROMENADE CONCERT TO NIGHT.—Under the auspices of the Thirteenth Regiment New-York State Militia, a grand Promenade Concert will be given to night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. GRAFULLA'S celebrated band will furnish a selection of choice music, and no doubt the attendance will be most brilliant.

NEWS FROM HAVANA.

The Alabama at Fort de France, Martinique—How She Escaped from the San Jacinto—Cruising About the West Indies.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, Saturday, Dec. 20, 1862.

Since I wrote you last there has appeared in the Diaro, of Santiago de Cuba, some late information respecting the whereabouts of that Flying Dutchman, the Alabama, which puts her as cruising at present about the West Indies. The above-named periodical of the 10th inst. says as follows:

"On the departure of the French mail steamer Tampico from Fort de France, Martinique, the famous champion of the South, the Alabama, had three days previously left that place, in spite of the steamer San Jacinto, that was chasing her. The circumstances respecting this affair are rather curious, and we learned them from one of the passengers by the Tampico to this port, who is worthy of being believed. The French authorities were obliged to restrain the excessive zeal of the Yankee sailors, who considered themselves sure of their prey, which every day gives them such unpleasant moments.

The Captains of both steamers were accustomed to see each other on shore, and in one of their frequent meetings the Captain of the Alabama said to the other of the San Jacinto:

'I have only 160 men and 12 guns, whilst you have 500 of the one and 30 of the other; if you promise me not to use your guns, I will board you, take you and destroy you.'

The Captain of the San Jacinto would not accept the challenge, telling him that he was in every way sure of getting him. The Captain of the Alabama, without paying attention to that bravado, apparently busied himself in constructing a raft with large bundles of dry grass and pitch, within view of his opponent. His first idea must, no doubt, have been to provoke an attack, but on the last night or two, which were very dark, the Captain of the Alabama, whose vessel is a screw-steamer and goes at the rate of nineteen knots an hour, made some false masts and yards with bamboos and the tops of the palm tree, placed lights to make the deception more complete, and sailed out with full steam up by the side of the San Jacinto.

The mistake of the Captain of this last, who took it for one of the French transports that are continually entering and going out of the harbor, was so great that he was for four days cruising outside, indulging in the prospect of his prize. At the same time that he learned the certainty of his having been outwitted, he also received intelligence that the Alabama had burnt an American schooner from Saint Pierre."

The same paper mentions the arrival in their harbor, on the 10th, of the English transport steamer Una with 111 French sailors on board for Vera Cruz.

The Ladies' Aid Society Annual Fair.

The annual Fair held under the auspices of the ladies connected with the various Methodist Churches of the City, to aid in sustaining the Old Ladies' Home—a most worthy charity—was commenced last Monday, in the City Assembly Rooms, and closed on Saturday evening. This Fair was most liberally patronized, and we are happy to learn that the proceeds will amount to about $10,000. Perhaps the most interesting part of the proceedings on Saturday was the presentation of a beautiful and unique picture of the Bishops and ministers to Bishop JANES, it having been purchased by representatives of the various churches, at a cost of $125. The novelty of this picture consisted in its having a likeness of the respective gentlemen, inclosed in a wreath worked out of their hair. This novel piece of work was executed by the wife of Rev. J. P. NEWMAN, of the Washington-square Church, and of course attracted considerable attention. Quite a number of the wealthy men who were present offered a high price for the picture, the highest sum being $500, which was bid by a member of the Forsyth-street Church, but when it was learned what disposition was to be made of it, all personal rivalry for its possession of course ceased. Rev. Dr. WAKELEY made a most eloquent presentation speech, to which Bishop JANES happily responded.

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

A Party of Rebel Cavalry Repulsed at Dumfries.

Rumored Surprise of Pennsylvania Cavalry at Occoquan.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Dec. 28.

The TIMES' special correspondent telegraphs the following, dated

HEADQUARTERS SIGEL'S CORPS, Sunday, Dec. 28.

A party of rebel cavalry, 2,500 strong, with six pieces of artillery, under command of FITZHUGH LEE, attacked our forces, under command of Col. CANBY, at Dumfries yesterday P. M. After a brisk fight of some three hours, the enemy was repulsed and retreated toward Warrenton Junction, our cavalry in pursuit. Our loss was three killed and nine wounded—the enemy's loss not ascertained. We have some prisoners. A body of cavalry was sent out from this point to intercept them, but were unsuccessful. It is supposed they encountered a portion of Gen. SLOCUM'S command at Wolf Run Shoals, as cannonading was heard in that direction.

Everything else quiet at this place.

RUMORED SURPRISE AT OCCOQUAN.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Dec. 28.

A report has reached Washington that a company of the Second Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanded by Col. PRICE, stationed at Occoquan, was surprised this morning by a detachment of rebel cavalry. A fight occurred, in which a number were wounded, and Capt. JOHNSON, of the Pennsylvania Cavalry, who was in command, killed. Several supply wagons were captured by the enemy.

REPORTS FROM HEADQUARTERS.

HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Sunday, Dec, 28.

The Richmond Dispatch, of the 25th, contains the the following:

PETERSBURGH, Wydnesday, Dec. 24.

On Monday Gen. PRYOR, with a small detachment, attacked a Yankee force of several hundred, stationed at the Isle of Wight Court-house to protect the election of Representatives to Congress. At the first charge Gen. DIX'S protectors fled in great confusion, and were chased ten miles at full speed. Our loss was trifling. Gen. PRYOR afterward visited Smithfield.

SELMA, Ala., Tuesday, Dec. 23.

It is reported this morning by passengers by last night's train, that 5,000 cavalry, under Gen. VAN DORN, dashed into Corinth on Sunday, dispersed the Yankees, and took possession of the place.

CANTON, Miss., Monday, Dec. 22.

Gen. GRANT'S army has fallen back beyond the Tallahatchie. An important expedition under Gen. VAN DORN, which had been out several days, had not been heard from.

The Dispatch contains an appeal for the relief of the Fredericksburgh sufferers who are in Richmond.

The latest reliable intelligence relating to the rebel army on our front states that they have massed their forces on both sides of the railroad, from Fredericksburgh to below Gurney's Station. The track for two miles south of Fredericksburgh has been torn up, and the rails are being used for turnouts at the present terminus of the road.

On Tuesday a brigade of rebel cavalry were outfitted with rations and forage for several days, and revolvers were distributed to the men near Gurney's Station. It was believed there that their destination was King George County via Port Royal.

On Saturday morning a new encampment made its appearance on the second range of hills in the rear of Fredericksburgh, in full position.

A considerable number of tents have recently been sent up from Richmond to Lee's army.

The Richmond Examiner of the 25th indicated that LEE, with a portion of his army, was moving toward Culpepper, to make a demonstration in front of Washington; but it is known that LEE was still near Fredericksburgh at Friday noon. The enemy are engaged every night in raising and extending breastworks along the streets fronting the river, as if to prevent any future crossings by pontoon bridges.

MESSRS TICKNOR & FIELDS, BOSTON,
PUBLISH THIS DAY
MRS. FREMONT'S NEW BOOK,
THE
STORY OF THE GUARD,
A CHRONICLE OF THE WAR.
BY MRS. JESSIE BENTON FREMONT.
1 vol. 16mo. Elegantly bound in beveled boards.
Price $1 25.
This book, from the pen of the wife of Gen. Fremont, is a true story of the celebrated body-guard, whose achievements have been made the subject of such diverse criticism. Mrs. Fremont has undertaken the story from a desire to do simple justice to "those truly soldierly young men, worthy of a place in the chronicles of knightly deeds, who were misrepresented, slighted, and finally insulted out of the service, because of the name they bore," and to contribute something to the relief of the families of such of the Guard as lost their lives in the service. To this latter purpose the profits of the work will be devoted.
The "Story of the Guard" is not a ponderous historical chronicle. Though it deals strictly in facts, it abounds in romantic and thrilling incidents. It is, as the author says of it, "the fireside story of the Guard; interesting from the facts—interesting because in ten thousand homes some vacant place will lend a stronger interest to the tale."
For sale by all booksellers, or sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price by the publishers,

SEVEN PER CENT. CALIFORNIA COUNTY BONDS.

We offer for sale $25,000 7-per cent. bonds of the County of Santa Clara, and $25,000 of the County of San Mateo, California, being part of a late issue authorized by the last Legislature, and a vote of the people for a subscription of the Capital Stock of the San Francisco and San Jose Railroad Company, of which stock $200,000 was taken by Santa Clara County, and $100,000 by San Mateo County. The coupons are payable semi-annually, May and November, (and probably in gold,) and the principal in 1867. These two counties lie next adjacent San Francisco, on the Bay, and are in a highly prosperous condition. By the report of the Treasurer of Santa Clara, April, 1862, the indebtedness of the County beyond these bonds was but $21,000, and the taxable property in 1862 was $5,200,000,) making a total indebtedness when these are all issued, of $221,000. The Treasurer has in hand funds to pay coupons for the present year.

San Mateo County, with the exception of these bonds, is entirely free of debt, and had $1,500,000 taxable property in 1862. By an act of the Legislature, a special tax is levied to meet the interest, and for the Sinking Fund to liquidate the bonds at maturity.

CONSTANTLY ON HAND AND FOR SALE AT PAR.
INTEREST TO COMMENCE FROM DATE OF PURCHASE.

The INTEREST on these BONDS is at the rate of 6 PER CENT. per annum, payable 1st of May and November, IN GOLD, which at the present rate of premium on Gold is equivalent to EIGHT PER CENT. PER ANNUM.

They are the CHEAPEST GOVERNMENT SECURITY NOW IN THE MARKET, and pay the largest interest on their cost.

They are destined to become the BEST KNOWN, MOST POPULAR and MOST AVAILABLE of all the bonds of the government.

They are the bonds upon which the government now relies, through the confidence and patriotism of the people, for continued financial support.

We keep them for sale to facilitate investment in them and make them more accessible to the public, and every dollar invested in them through us contributes to the direct and immediate support of the government.

SALE OF STATE BONDS.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
TREASURY OFFICE, HARTFORD, Dec. 26, 1862.

SEALED PROPOSALS FOR THE PURCHASE of $1,000,000 of the Bonds of the State of Connecticut will be received at the office of the Treasurer in Hartford until the 6th day of January, 1863, at noon, when said proposals will be opened in the presence of such bidders as choose to attend, and the Bonds awarded to the highest bidders.

Each proposal must be accompanied with a certificate of deposit or certified check on any solvent bank in the States of Connecticut or Massachusetts, or the City of New-York, equal to 5 per cent. of the amount subscribed, to be held as security for the faithful fulfillment of the bid, and returned to the owners, on their order, and must state the number of Bonds of each denomination desired.

It is provided that no bid can be accepted at less than the par value of the Bonds, and full payment in funds currents in New-York and Boston will be required within seven days after notice of acceptance.

The Bonds are in denominations of $100, $500, and $1,000, dated January 1, 1863, and payable in twenty years from date at the Treasurer's office, with 6 per cent. coupons attached, payable at the same place in January and July of each year.

The sale of the above Bonds is authorized by Act of the General Assembly, passed at their special session in December, and the faith and credit of the State is pledged for their redemption.

GABRIEL W. COITE, State Treasurer.

TRIUMPHANT SUCCESS
Of the great Romantic Spectacular Drama,
FAUST

MARGUERITE,
MR. J. B. ROBERTS AS MEPHISTOPHILES.
THIS EVENING AND EVERY EVENING, UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

The scenery, costumes and appointments of "Faust and Marguerite" are unsurpassable: some scenes Mr. Selwyn seems to have painted as if he meant them to be framed for an art gallery, so perfectly has he finished them.—New-York Herald.

"Faust and Marguerite" is brilliant to the last degree. It affords several of the most elaborate and striking scenic displays that have ever been presented in New-York. The mounting of the piece is superb, the scenery throughout magnificent, the dresses rich and tasteful and full of variety. The best drama ever written would hardly need to be better put upon the stage.—New-York Tribune.

We have no recollection of a production that combined more admirably a spectacle with the positive feeling of a work of art. Mr. J. B. Roberts, an actor of reputation, as Mephistophiles, gave a remarkably strong and sinister interpretation to that potentate's character. He is, beyond all doubt, the best representative of his part we have had here.—New-York Times.

THE BANKS EXPEDITION.

fold—first, I was anxious to see something of the important events which were occurring there, in the transfer of government from Gen. BUTLER to Gen. BANKS; and, second, my letter containing a full account of the taking of Baton Rouge was scarcely more than commenced, and I wanted the time afforded by the transit from one place to the other to complete it. Important scenes and events had so crowded upon each other in the previous forty-eight hours that it was utterly impossible to do more than jot them down, en passant, in one's note-book.

We left Baton Rouge in the evening of Wednesday, the 17th, and got here at 4 P. M. the next day,—(precisely one fortnight since we left home,)—just in the nick of time to get our letters on the Roanoke, bound to New-York, and which moved off within ten minutes after our letters were put on board. Nothing of importance occurred during the passage, the guerillas on either bank, who now and then take a fancy for a stray shot or two at passing objects, not having thought fit to molest us, and if they had, they would have found us ready to return the compliment.

We anchored during the night some few miles below Baton Rouge, and early in the morning resumed our course, stopping only once, at Donaldsonville, on the right bank of the Mississippi, to communicate orders to our forces there. This is the place which FARRAGUT shelled, as he did Bayou Sara and other places, to put a stop to the murderous practice of the bushwhackers, and the ruins there give good proof of how effectually he did his work.

Your regular New-Orleans correspondent has, doubtless, given you so full an account of all the political events which have transpired here during the last two or three days, as to make it unnecessary for me to enter into any lengthy description of them. I am tempted, however, to make some few remarks upon the very strange and, to an extent incomprehensible, state of affairs I find here.

Foremost, of course, among all questions of public interest, is the sudden and mysterious removal of Gen. BUTLER from the post he has so long occupied, and the inauguration of Gen. BANKS in his place. Never before—except perhaps among the Big-endians and the Little-endians, we read of in Gulliver's Travels—has there been so thorough a division of public opinion as exists here about the merits and demerits of Gen. BUTLER and his administration. Some extol them both to the third heaven, while others praise the latter, but denounce the man, and many again abhor both him and his administration. It is unnecessary to say that the latter class generally comprises those rebels at heart who naturally feel as much detestation of one who could so effectually block their game, as a rat may be supposed to do of the trap in which he is caught, or some other nameless vermin of the red vermifuge scattered among them. Every genuine traitor must necessarily hate BUTLER as much as a certain gentleman must hate holy water; but every thoughtful loyalist believes that no other man was better qualified to break the backbone of treason in a place like New-Orleans.

But I am sorry to say that the other two above-mentioned classes of thinkers embrace those who have, hitherto, ranked as Gen. BUTLER'S most devoted friends and admirers. Among these there appears to be but one opinion as to the wonderful efficacy of his past administration, and the almost miraculous manner in which he drew order and peace out of chaos and anarchy in this city. But here these friends part; the one set allowing not one word to be whispered against the spotless integrity of the General, while the others circumstantially relate instances of the most horrible and atrocious acts of despotism, corruption, and abuse of authority, which I ever heard brought against any public character in my life. If these charges be false—and in my heart I hope they are, (not only for the sake of Gen. BUTLER, of whom I know nothing, but for the character of our common country)—no execration could be deep enough for those who could have put such charges in circulation. His friends count upon his laying an unblemished record of his stewardship before the public, and I sincerely hope he will succeed in doing so. I understand he leaves this, on Monday or Tuesday next, in the North Star, for New-York.

The best explanation I have yet heard of the possible reason for this mysterious removal of Gen. BUTLER just now, is the following: Those of his friends who believe as thoroughly in his honesty of purpose and blameless character as they do in his universally-confessed administrative powers, think that he has merely been removed to be held in readiness for some other theatre of action more requiring his stern and unflinching treatment than New-Orleans is supposed to do at present. "Now that the work of throttling treason here"—say these reasoners—"has been so thoroughly accomplished, the presence of the man who did it is only a cause of needless irritation among the people, and the feverish crisis having passed, all that the patient now needs is careful nursing and reviving nourishment."

I hope those who think so are not mistaking the true nature of the disease, and consequently the proper cure to be administered. I have seen so much of the palliation or "lenient" mode of treatment applied to treason, open or concealed, and so little good resulting from it, that I confess I have about as much faith in it as in any other sort of quack medicine. One thing, though, I hope and sincerely believe, and that is, that if our enemies here—and there are plenty of them—are counting upon carrying out their plots and machinations because Gen. BUTLER has been supplanted by Gen. BANKS, they will find themselves awfully mistaken.

The suaviter in modo of Gen. BANKS does not necessarily imply the absence of that fortiter in re to which Gen. BUTLER has so long made them accustomed. It is true, that our new Governor must necessarily take some little time to "learn the ropes," in vulgar parlance; that he may, for a time, be mistaking enemies for friends, treason for loyalty, dirty-handed schemers for immaculate patriots; but it won't take a man of his keen perceptions and administrative talents a long time in separating the sheep from the goats; and this line of duty once clearly before him, I venture to prophesy that rebel plotters here are going to find his rule of the wicked just as firm and unbending as that of his predecessor. Let them read attentively his splendid proclamation, and they will therein find every hope for the good, but terror for the bad—and Gen. BANKS bears the character of never promising what he does not accomplish. Upon the whole, a better man could not have been selected for this position; for, while his bland and affable bearing is likely to disarm many who were irritated at Gen. BUTLER'S constitutional bluntness and severity of manner, his firmness will be likely to reassure those who feared to see the reins of power taken from the vigorous hands of his forerunner.

I was not here at the time the transfer took place, but I have just been at the headquarters of the new Governor, and there found the wheels of government running on just as smoothly as if there had been no change of coachmen.

One new and very extraordinary feature has just been introduced into the temporary government of Louisiana, and that is the appointment of Judge CHAS. A. PEABODY, of New-York, as Provisional Judge of the State. His commission, of which I send you a verbatim copy, is one of the most remarkable instances of judicial power invested in one man, that perhaps is on record. Extraordinary diseases, however, must have extraordinary cures, and, from the high character which Judge PEABODY seems to hold among all classes, we may count upon his enormous power being wielded with firmness and justice tempered by mercy.

I have nothing else to add before the Columbia leaves this afternoon, except that we are on the eve of events which I am not permitted even to allude to, but which will be of startling consequence, and if, by God's blessing, successful, will fill every loyal heart with gladness and strike terror to the very marrow of this rebellion.

EXECUTIVE ORDER,

ESTABLISHING A PROVISIONAL COURT IN LOUISIANA.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Oct. 26, 1862.

The insurrection which has for some time prevailed in several of the States of this Union, including Louisiana, having temporarily subverted and swept away the civil institutions of that State, including the judiciary and the judicial authorities of the Union, so that it has become necessary to hold the State in military occupation; and it being indispensably necessary that there shall be some judicial tribunal existing there capable of administering justice, I have, therefore, thought it proper to appoint, and I do hereby constitute a Provisional Court, which shall be a Court of Record, for the State of Louisiana, and I do hereby appoint CHARLES A. PEABODY, of New-York, to be a Provisional Judge to hold said Court, with authority to hear, try and determine all causes, civil and criminal, including causes in law, equity, revenue and admiralty, and particularly all such powers and jurisdiction as belong to the District and Circuit Courts of the United States, conforming his proceedings, so far as possible, to the course of proceedings and practice which has been customary in the Courts of the United States and Louisiana—his judgment to be final and conclusive. And I do hereby authorize and empower the said Judge to make and establish such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the exercise of his jurisdiction, and to appoint a prosecuting Attorney, Marshal and Clerk of the said Court, who shall perform the functions of Attorney, Marshal and Clerk, according to such proceedings and practice as before mentioned, and such rules and regulations as may be made and established by said Judge. These appointments are to continue during the pleasure of the President, not extending beyond the military occupation of the City of New-Orleans, or the restoration of the civil authority in that City and in the State of Louisiana. These officers shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the War Department, compensation as follows: * * * * * * *

Such compensations to be certified by the Secretary of War. A copy of this order, certified by the Secretary of War, and delivered to such Judge, shall be deemed and held to be a sufficient commission. Let the seal of the United States be hereunto affixed.

[L. S.] ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President:

WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, 23d October, 1862.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy, duly examined and compared with the original of the Executive Order of the President of the United States, constituting a Provisional Court for the State of Louisiana.

Witness my hand and seal of the War Department.

[L. S.] EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Attest, JOHN BOTTS, Chief Clerk.

OUR NEW-ORLEANS CORRESPONDENCE.

The Arrival of Gen. Banks—His Assumption of the Command of the Department of the Gulf—Gen. Butler's Order on Resigning Command—Interesting Official Documents, &c.

DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW-ORLEANS, Wednesday, Dec. 17, 1862.

On Sunday last, some time in the middle of the day, Gen. BUTLER received a telegram "from the forts," that Maj.-Gen. BANKS and a part of his fleet of transports were coming up the river. This announcement was the first that was received here of what subsequently proved to be the approach of the new commanding General. The speculations as to Gen. BANKS' destination, I am bound to say, were quite as wide of the mark as were any in your editorial of the 6th inst., when you guess he was going anywhere in the world almost except New-Orleans. On Sunday evening, about 9 o'clock, I walked quietly down to the St. Charles Hotel, which building is again open to the public, and there I found a crowd of fine-looking officers, who proved to be members of Maj.-Gen. BANKS' Staff. Early the next morning I learned, from reliable authority, that Gen. BUTLER had been superseded in his command. If I were asked to name a successor to Gen. BUTLER, in this most difficult to control of all the military departments of the Government, Gen. BANKS would have been that man. It is unnecessary for me to say that there was excitement upon the faces of soldiers and civilians. The change was too sudden, however, for any active demonstration, and it was not until late in the day that the matter was discussed in the streets. Some of the ceremonies accompanying the change were not without interest.

At 11 o'clock, the city officials, accompanied by the Mayor, Col. DEMING, in a body proceeded to the St. Charles Hotel, to pay a ceremonious visit to Maj.-Gen. BANKS. The party was conducted to the parlor, and, after some little delay, Gen. BANKS, accompanied by the most prominent members of his Staff, entered the room. The last time I saw Gen. BANKS was at the New-York Academy of Music, some three years ago. The time passed, with the exposure and responsibilities of the camp, have wrought considerable change in his appearance. He is now more of the soldier than the politician. Upon Gen. BANKS' appearance, a circle was formed, and Col. DEMING proceeded to say that he, together with the chief officers of the City Government, called to pay their respects and to give the General a cordial welcome to New-Orleans. Gen. BANKS, in reply, expressed himself pleased with the compliment paid him, and expressed a hope that there would be no cause for regret on account of the present meeting. He remarked that he had long been desirous of visiting New-Orleans, but had never dreamed of doing so in his present position as a soldier. He said he took a warm interest in the prosperity and welfare of the city, and would look to the gentlemen before him for such assistance and advice as would be most likely to restore it to its former prosperity. At the conclusion of these remarks, he was introduced by Col. DEMING to each person present, which ceremony having been concluded, the party fell into a general and cordially-conducted conversation. While this was going on in the magnificent saloon of one of the largest hotels of the Union, while there was being enacted the official reception of Gen. BANKS, I could not help contrasting this magnificent and peaceful scene, with the reception a few months previously given to Gen. BUTLER. He came with every house closed against him, the excited mob followed in his footsteps, and hanging to the lamp-post the only person who dared to say a friendly word to one of his attendants. The people looked on with starved and stolid faces, the levee smoked in ruins, the Union was apparently dead. How wonderful, how significant the change!

At 12 o'clock the two Major-Generals—BENJAMIN F. BUTLER and NATHANIEL P. BANKS—with the members of their respective Staffs, officially met at headquarters on Julia-street, for the purpose of a ceremonious introduction. In addition to the Staff, there were many officers of the division, among whom were Brig.-Gen. SHERMAN, Brig.-Gen. WHITEHEL, Maj.-Gen. AUGUR, Col. CLARK, of the Sixth Michigan; Lieut.-Col. ELLIOTT, First Louisiana; Capt. LOWRY, of the gunboat Sciota; Col. PAYNE, Col. E. M. BROWN, D. MCCORMACK and Col. T. B. THORPE. After a few moments of silence, Gen. BUTLER stepped forward and welcomed Gen. BANKS to the Department of the Gulf. He spoke feelingly of the troops that had been under his command, and said that they were brave, self-sacrificing, and would cheerfully obey every order. Gen. BANKS replied that the only pleasure he had in taking his present position was, that he was doing so in obedience to the Government of the United States, and that in all positions in which he might be placed he had only one desire, and that was to strictly perform his duty. With these remarks ended, the two chiefs greeted each other cordially, with such demonstration, indeed, as mark the manner of old friends.

Gen. BUTLER now proceeded to introduce each member of his Staff, as follows: Maj. Strong, Col. Shaffer, Col. Turner, Col. French, Dr. McCormick, Lieut.-Col. Kinsman, Maj. Bell, Maj. Greene, Capt. Davis, Capt. Clark, Capt. Hagerty, Capt. Kensel, Capt. Puffer, Lieut. Clarke, Lieut. Martin, and als Gens. Sherman, Weitzel and other gentlemen in turn.

This ceremony over, Gen. BANKS introduced the members of his Staff: Lieut.-Col. R. B. Irwin, Capt. R. T. Dunham, Lieut. C. A. Hartwell, Lieut. S. M. Whiteside, Surgeon R. H. Alexander, Surgeon W. C. Spencer, Surgeon T. B. Reed, Col. J. S. Clark, Col. S. B. Holabird, Capt. W. W. Rowley, Lieut. C. S. Sargent, Lieut.-Col. D. H. Strother, Capt. J. E. Wawes, Capt. T. W. Robbins, Maj. D. C. Houston, Mr. J. F. Tucker, Col. G. G. Beckwith, Capt. H. L. Abbott, Maj. H. Robinson, Lieut. Hill, Capt. W. S. Hooper, Commissary Cowie.

These formalities over, Gen. BANKS, with the members of his Staff, withdrew, when Gen. BUTLER, after some few remarks to his officers, expressed the hope that each member present would do all in his power to aid and assist those who had so recently arrived, bestowing encomiums upon their individual merits. He passed a high eulogium upon Gen. BANKS, representing that he was an honor to the country, and a Chief of which the nation might well be proud. The General then, with considerable emotion in his manner, took up a roll of manuscript from the table, and said he had one more official act to perform, and that was to read a parting address to the officers and troops that so recently formed his military department. He then, with a clear voice, proceeded as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW-ORLEANS, Dec. 15, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 105.—SOLDIERS OF THE ARMY OF THE GULF: Relieved from further duties in this Department by direction of the President, under date of Nov. 9, 1862, I take leave of you by this final order, it being impossible to visit your scattered outposts, covering hundreds of miles of the frontier of a larger territory than some of the kingdoms of Europe.

I greet you, my brave comrades, and say farewell! This word—endeared as you are by a community of privations, hardships, dangers, victories, successes, military and civil—is the only sorrowful thought I have.

You have deserved well of your country. Without a murmur you sustained an encampment on a sandbar so desolate that banishment to it with every care and comfort possible has been the most dreaded punishment inflicted upon your bitterest and most insulting enemies.

You had so little transportation that but a handful could advance to compel submission by the Queen City of the rebellion, whilst others waded breast-deep in the marshes which surround St. Philip, and forced the surrender of a fort deemed impregnable to land attack by the most skillful engineers of your country and her enemy.

At your occupation order, law, quiet and peace sprang to this city, filled with the bravos of all nations, where for a score of years, during the profoundest peace, human life was scarcely safe at noonday.

By your discipline you illustrated the best traits of the American soldier, and enchained the admiration of those that came to scoff.

Landing with a military chest containing but seventy-five dollars, from the hoards of a rebel government you have given to your country's treasury nearly a half million of dollars, and so supplied yourselves with the needs of your service that your expedition has cost your Government less by four-fifths than any other.

You have fed the starving poor, the wives and children of your enemies, so converting enemies into friends that they have sent their representatives to your Congress by a vote greater than your entire numbers from districts in which, when you entered, you were tauntingly told that there was "no one to raise your flag."

By your practical philanthropy you have won the confidence of the "oppressed race" and the slave. Hailing you as deliverers, they are ready to aid you as willing servants, faithful laborers, or using the tactics taught them by your enemies, to fight with you in the field.

By steady attention to the laws of health you have stayed the pestilence, and, humble instruments in the hand of God, you have demonstrated the necessity that his creatures should obey his laws, and reaping His blessing in this most unhealthy climate, you have preserved your ranks fuller than those of any other battalions of the same length of service.

You have met double numbers of the enemy and defeated him in the open field, but I need not further enlarge upon this topic. You were sent here to do that.

I commend you to your commander. You are worthy of his love.

Farewell my comrades! again farewell!

BENJ. F. BUTLER, Major-General Commanding.

I am curious to know how the Government came in possession of the correspondence between MOORE, late Secesh Governor of this State, and JEFF. DAVIS. MOORE now has his headquarters in a little village at the foot of the Lafourche bayou, on the Gulf coast, known as Opelousas. To this place he ran after he so disgracefully fled from New-Orleans, and from this noted locality he issued his brutal proclamation, inaugurating a system that has led to the present appalling distress all over the State. For some weeks past there has been rumors that the large population of white persons principally engaged in a profitable lumber business, with an occasional small cotton-plantation lying on the opposite side of Lake Ponchatrain, had been so disgusted with rebel rules that they are only waiting a favorable opportunity to seek protection under the Union. I have heard some tales of suffering from people who have escaped from their dominions of despotism that almost exceed belief, for the guilty parties were the guerrillas, robbing their own friends and neighbors; in other words, thieves and robbers, commissioned to carry on their work by the unfeeling tyrants at Richmond. I can readily believe that Gov. MOORE has been compelled to ask the privilege of opening trade for his constituents, and this I believe more especially because all his acts of seeming cruelty have been inconsistent with the general character of his life, before circumstances placed him in the chair of rebel chief magistrate of Louisana.

P.S. A rumor prevails in town that the rebel forti fications at Port Hudson have been evacuated. This is not probable, yet it is not impossible.

DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW-ORLEANS, Friday, Dec. 19, 1862.

The arrival of Gen. BANKS and his troops, and the consequent change in the Military government of this city, of course causes a great deal of excitement. On Monday next Gen. BUTLER receives his friends at the Mayor's Office, between 12 and 2 o'clock. He leaves for New-York on the following Tuesday; at least such is the understanding in the streets.

A rumor prevails here to-day, that the rebels are retreating from Vicksburgh; this is quite probable, and in a measure confirms the rumor that Port Hudson is also abandoned.

GEN. BANKS' PROCLAMATION.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW-ORLEANS, Dec. 16, 1862.

In obedience to orders from the President, I have assumed command of the Department of the Gulf, to which is added, by his special order, the State of Texas.

The duty with which I am charged requires me to assist in the restoration of the Government of the United States. It is my desire to secure to the people of every class all the privileges of possession and enjoyment which are consistent with public safety, or which it is possible for a beneficent and just Government to confer.

In the execution of the high trust with which I am charged, I rely upon the coöperation and counsel of all loyal and well-disposed people, and upon the manifest interest of those dependent upon the pursuits of peace, as well as upon the support of naval and land forces.

My instructions require me to treat as enemies those who are enemies, but I shall gladly regard as friends those who are friends. No restrictions will be placed upon the freedom of individuals which are not imperatively demanded by considerations of public safety; but, while their claims will be liberally considered, it is due also to them to state that all the rights of the Government will be unflinchingly maintained.

Respectful consideration and prompt reparation will be accorded to all persons who are wronged in body or estate by those under my command.

The Government does not profit by the prolongation of civil contest or the private or public sufferings which attend it. Its fruits are not equally distributed. In the disloyal States desolation has empire on the sea and on the land. In the North the war is an abiding sorrow, but not yet a calamity. Its cities and towns are increasing in population, wealth and power. The refugees from the South alone compensate in great part for the terrible decimations of battle.

The people of this Department who are disposed to stake their fortunes and their lives upon resistance to the Government may wisely reflect upon the immutable conditions which surround them. The Valley of the Mississippi is the chosen seat of population, product and power, on this continent. In a few years, twenty-five million people, unsurpassed in material resources and capacity for war, will swarm upon its fertile rivers. Those who assume to set conditions upon their exodus to the Gulf count upon a power not given to man. The country washed by the waters of the Ohio, the Missouri and the Mississippi can never be permanently severed. If one generation basely barters away its rights, immortal honors will rest upon another that reclaims them.

Let it never be said either that the East and the West may be separated. Thirty days distance from the markets of Europe may satisfy the wants of Louisiana and Arkansas, but it will not answer the demands of Illinois and Ohio. The Valley of the Mississippi will have its deltas upon the Atlantic. The physical force of the West will debouch upon its shores with a power as resistless as the torrents of its giant rivers. This country cannot be permanently divided. Ceaseless wars may drain its blood and treasure, domestic tyrants or foreign foes may grasp the sceptre of its power, but its destiny will remain unchanged. It will still be united. God has ordained it. What avails, then, the destruction of the best Government ever devised by man—the self-adjusting, self-correcting Constitution of the United States?

People of the Southwest! Why not accept the conditions imposed by the imperious necessities of geographical configuration and commercial supremacy, and reëstablish your ancient prosperity and renown? Why not become the founders of States which, as the entrepôts and dépôts of your own Central and Upper Valleys, may stand in the affluence of their resources without superior, and in the privileges of the people, without a peer among the nations of the earth.

N. P. BANKS, Major-General Commanding.

ORDERS FROM GEN. BANKS.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW-ORLEANS, Dec. 17, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 110.—1. All the telegraph lines in this Department are placed under the protection of the Government.

By orders from the War Department, CHARLES S. BULKLEY will have the control of all telegraph lines, and will take charge of all telegraph offices and materials in this Department.

Commanding officers will afford the necessary aid for the protection and repair of the lines.

2. All houses in New-Orleans which have been taken possession of for the Government will be immediately turned over to such officer of the Quartermaster's Department as Col. S. B. HOLABIRD, Chief Quartermaster, may designate, and such houses will not be occupied hereafter except by his assignment, in no case to exceed the regulation allowance of quarters. By command of Maj.-Gen. BANKS.

RICHARD S. IRWIN, Lieutenant-Colonel, Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW-ORLEANS, Dec. 17, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 111.—All sales of property on account of the United States will be, and are hereby, suspended until further notice. By command of Maj.-Gen. BANKS.

RICHARD B. IRWIN, Lieutenant-Colonel, Assistant Adjutant-General.

OFFICE PROVOST-MARSHAL GENERAL OF LOUISIANA, NEW-ORLEANS, Dec. 17, 1862.

By direction of the Commanding General, notice is hereby given that the time of departure of registered enemies, and others who have procured passes at this office, to go beyond the lines, is postponed for ten days. Due notice will be given of the time of departure.

JONAS H. FRENCH, Provost-Marshal General Louisiana.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW-ORLEANS, Dec. 18, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 112.—The Commander of every District, brigade, post, separate regiment or detachment, within the limits of this Department, will at once send into these headquarters a consolidated morning report of his command for the day succeeding that on which this order is received by him.

A similar report must be made hereafter on the 10th, 20th, and last day of every month.

All independent commanders will be held responsible for the prompt rendition of these reports, and will exact promptness from their subordinate commanders.

Immediate requisition will be made on these headquarters for a three months' supply of the new forms of blank morning reports.

By command of Major-Gen. BANKS.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

Manifesto of the Mexican Congress Against the French Invasion.

Patriotic Appeal to the Mexican Nation.

The following is translated from the Havana newspaper, the Diario de la Marina, of the 18th inst:

"As an historical document, and to keep our readers acquainted with everything concerning the important question of Mexico, we publish below a great part of the manifesto that the Mexican Congress has addressed to the nation, urging it to repel the French invasion.

It is as follows:

The Representatives of the United States of Mexico, assembled in Congress, declare that the first and most imperious of their duties, in beginning their legislative labors, at this constitutional epoch of their Legislature, is to declare to their fellow-citizens, and to the whole world, what is their intention on meeting together to fulfill the high mission that the people have intrusted to them in such critical and solemn circumstances, and what is equally their firm resolution, whatever may be on the other hand the events which the future may prepare for the country.

With the nation invaded and insulted, after having been so much calumniated, its rights unrecognized and violated, its sovereignty and its independence contemned, there has been invoked for the justice of such deeds the downfall of President JUAREZ, putting him forward as the sole cause and as the only enemy that it was necessary to combat, in the same manner as at the beginning of the present century there was invoked for reasons very different, the downfall of NAPOLEON I. It is said that war is not made against the nation, but against a single man, and contrary to what leagued Europe declared in other terms to invaded France, we are promised a thousand advantages, and that the will of all shall be consulted, whilst they pull down the Government established by us all.

The Emperor of the French declares to Mexico that he does not send it war but happiness; that his only enemy is JUAREZ, and that on his disappearance all that Mexico wishes shall be done, so that if it insists in placing at its head President JUAREZ, the French troops will support them.

It would be superfluous to inquire by what right there is required of the Mexicans such a thing, or any other that militates in the least with their sovereignty.

It is well known that all laws and rights are dumb when arms alone command and make themselves heard.

But to such language, Mexico and all Mexicans reply that they do not accept—that they will never accept—the least foreign intervention in their affairs and in their social and political organization; that citizen BENITO JUAREZ having been elected, freely and constitutionally, first magistrate of the Republic, they will never consent to receive the law from a foreign Power, however powerful it may be, however numerous and warlike may be the armies with the aid of which the country is invaded, but that they will oppose, now and always, until the legal term of his power is concluded, his separation from the post which he so worthily occupies.

The Congress of the Union declares so by the organ of its representatives in the most solemn manner, declaring, at the same time, that it will invest the Executive, under the present circumstances, with all the amount of powers requisite for the present posture of affairs; that the Constitution confers on him sufficient powers for such a purpose, and places, consequently, all its confidence in the President.

The Representatives of the Nation declare, in like manner, that they will apply themselves, with all possible zeal, to the development of its political system, endowing it with the Constitutional laws that are still wanting to crown the edifice, and give it all the firmness and solidity of which it is deficient.

The assembling of the present Congress at this moment, is the best and most triumphant proof of the regularity of the progress of the Administration.

The same regularity which is observed in the States that compose this Confederation, and which has reigned in the free, spontaneous and legal elections of all of us who are here assembled, give the lie to all the calumnies invented by our gratuitous enemies; and the Congress of the United Mexican States consider it as one of their first and most agreeable duties to consummate the grand work of the consolidation of the federal institutions, pursuing their labors with the same calmness and admirable regularity.

In occupying themselves with their duties at home, the Congress will not neglect those which affairs abroad impose upon them.

The Congress is animated with the best disposition to defend the honor and good fame of Mexico and its authorities. Now, that both the latter and the former have given such honorable as well as evident proof that the country was calumniated, by the urbane, noble, loyal and generous conduct which the Republic has observed and which it still observes, toward the foreigners that live in it, and toward the French themselves, in spite of the imprudence of some of the former, and of the manner of proceeding of a part of the latter, it will persist in that conduct, and will support the Government until friendly relations are reestablished with Foreign Powers, and until justice is done to the one who has it on his side. The Republic will fulfill its duties and obligations, and will continue to observe the same conduct. The peaceable foreigner will be protected, as he has hitherto been, not only as far as right might demand, but in addition as far as the most ample generosity can inspire; the bad or the criminal will be repressed or punished in the severest manner.

The Representatives, in Congress assembled, desire nothing so ardently as to see confirmed the hopes which the Executive made known at the opening of its session; and that will be a day of satisfaction and glory for the country, in which there will be reëstablished a good intelligence between the Republic and the Governments of England and Spain.

The noble and loyal conduct of their Representatives at the moment of the breaking of the Convention at Soledad, demands, on our part, every kind of consideration, and Mexico will never forget the chivalry and gentlemanly conduct of the valiant Spanish General.

The Mexican Republic has accepted the ravaging war which the Emperor of the French has sent against it. And it could not be otherwise if it is considered as the possessor of the rights and duties which every sovereign and independent nation holds.

But that resistance to which it is forced, that defensive war, it will carry it on, for its own honor, as, until now, every civilized nation has carried it on in conformity with the law of peace and war, in accordance with the progress of the age.

It will carry it on with energy and decision, and will defend itself from him who makes the war without ceasing to declare at the same time all its sympathies for the nation against which it sees itself forced to struggle.

If the Emperor says to Mexico that he does not wish war with it, and that he makes it only against its President, JUAREZ, the Mexican nation replies that it has not provoked, that it has not wished for, that it does not wish for war against France, that it has accepted it, and will carry it on for as long as may be necessary, and with all the vigor and perseverance which wars of that nature demand.

Mexico only wishes for peace and good intelligence with France; it only desires to see it prosper, and that it may be great and happy, and does not entertain with regard to it any other sentiment but that of admiration when it sees her proceeding in the path of justice.

Mexico has accepted this unjust war, and will not abandon what it has undertaken, will not enter upon any proposition of peace, nor any kind of arrangement that may cause it to sacrifice its honor and dignity, or suffer the least dismemberment of its territory.

The indignation which those attacks excite will make all Mexicans united to drive back so unjust an invasion. Some of them, whom the spirit of party had drawn to the foreign camp, seduced by the words, independence and liberty, have begun to see clearly, and have come back and will come back every day to where their brothers and country call them.

In defending Mexico neither opinions nor particular persons are defended; the most sacred cause for every man in society is defended, and in that there are neither majorities nor minorities. During some time, and more than once, a minority has ruled in this Capital, finding its support in the representative of the Emperor of the French, and invoking the protection of this latter. But that time has passed never to return. To-day it is not a minority, nor a part more or less sound, of this or that race which is put at the head of that invasion; all of us who are getting ready for defence are Mexicans, and the oppressed majorities are impudently invoked when a nation is beheld united and unanimous, and when there is heard, by the organ of its free and lawful representatives, its energetic and sovereign voice.

The country in danger calls us to its defence; let us do it worthy of the cause that is sustained, and let us imitate the heroic conduct of those who were our fathers.

That unconquerable defences carried to the last extremity; resistance by every means, exhausting every resource; the sacrifice of everything and all, of lives and property, without being stopped by anything, without seeing itself restrained by any secondary consideration; such are the intention and spirit that animate all and each of the representatives of the insulted Mexican people.

Firmness in the object, whatever may be the obstacles or disasters that may occur; perseverance in action, and the union of all hearts, coöperating all and in all possible ways, each one according to his means, to obtain the result we aim at, such is the unanimous opinion and greatest of the wishes of the Mexicans who represent their fellow-citizens in this Congress.

United, we shall be respected; united, we shall suffer the fortune which is reserved for us; united, we shall oppose all dangers and overcome all misfortunes; united, we shall at last triumph, and shall come out with honor and glory from a struggle which, since it has not been provoked, is an example of the greatest of injustices that can be found in the annals of history.

SUCCESS AND FAILURE.—How to achieve the former and avoid the latter in all the business relations of life is one of the grand controlling influences of human existence. Men succeed, and the unthinking pronounce them lucky; others, possessing apparently an equal share of intelligence and sagacity, stagger under a load of business responsibility, until credit is destroyed, and they abandon the weary struggle with a consciousness that life is a failure, and the same class of observers oraccularly declare that they are the victims of unmerciful misfortune. We think this view of the case a false one. Accidents undoubtedly have occurred that have destroyed the prospects of many a worthy man, but they are the exceptions that prove the rule; yet such should not accept a single defeat as the finality of effort. "Try again" is a good motto. Imitate the example of those who have prospered. Try to learn the simple lesson that prudence, energy and will are the qualities that win fortunes. Men possessing them—like, for instance, KNOX, the Hatter, invariably strike out the right path and travel it cheerily and pluckily until the goal is reached. We distinctly recollect his modest advent into the world of trade. Graduating from LEARY'S, an establishment popular with our citizens when HALLECK wrote his "FANNY," which popularity it retained until his retirement—he opened his little shop in Fulton-street, where he exhibited a very few specimens of his handicraft. The public, notwithstanding his humble surroundings, and the fact that he was at once manufacturer, salesman, and shop-boy, found him out, and though his advance was slow, it was sure. His hats became the talk of the town, and the demand for them was so great that he was compelled to remove to larger quarters in the Sun Building, where he continued to prosper until he took possession of his present store, No. 212 Broadway. He is now unquestionably at the head of his business, and is still the same attentive, prudent, watchful manager, working daily quite as laboriously as any of his assistants, and taking as much delight as ever in turning out fabrics, the beauty and excellence of which extort universal admiration. "Fail!" "There is no such word as fail" with men like KNOX, and those who complain that they find it hard work to make both ends meet, must learn from such examples how easy it is of accomplishment if you get about it in the proper way.
